

HOW TO MAKE GAME SAFER
Coach Cole Says Public is Misinformed of Real Danger.
MASS PLAYS NOT AT FAULT
Less Likelihood of Injury from Them Than Any Other Mode of Conducting Foot Ball.

LINCOLN, Nov. 26.—(Special)—With the foot ball season of 1930 at a close and with many of the gridiron experts of the country suggesting changes in the great college game for next fall, "King" Cole, coach of the Nebraska eleven, has come forward with a few points that he thinks ought to revise the rules enough to take away the danger element, against which there is no great clamor.

First—Make a severe penalty for crawling with the ball, which would keep a player from attempting to make ground after he has been downed.
Second—Take off some of the penalties for a forward pass. For instance, allow a team to make the pass and, in case the ball strikes the ground, let the side making the pass still be in possession of the ball, although suffering the present fifteen-yard penalty. Let the pass count as a down.

Third—Permit two forward passes to each scrimmage and make any player of the offensive side eligible to receive the ball.
Fourth—Eliminate the rule which requires that a ball shall go five yards out from center.

That is just where they show their ignorance of the game; most of the injuries this year have been received when two flying bodies came together in open field work.

In the mass plays the backs do not get up enough speed to become hurt. It is in the open field, when the men are running, that the serious accidents occur.

Injury Often from Ignorance.
Some players have been hurt in trying to block mass plays, but they did not know how to throw themselves on the ground.

It is my opinion that the open field plays are what make the game dangerous. When several men are permitted to race around the field after a ball, or try to get the oval in a scramble, some of them are more apt to be hurt than when they try to carry the ball through the line on mass plays.

The first thing that ought to be changed in the present rule is the elimination of crawling with the ball. If the offensive side were penalized for trying to push along with the oval after a player is downed, there would be no need of the defensive side's piling a bunch of players on a man to hold him down.

The idea at the present time, though, is that the open plays are the best, and so the rules committee will have to give the forward pass more emphasis. The forward pass is becoming a prominent feature of the play.

On the forward pass there will have to be less restrictions, in order to get a team to use this play. As the rules now stand the pass is a very dangerous play and teams hesitate to employ it.

The officials in a game can do much toward cutting out rough play, and they ought to be compelled to enforce the rule and call the ball down the second a play is stopped.
