BLAZING TRAIL TO THE POLE

Peary's Ship Among the Bergs of the North Seas.

DYNAMITE BATTERY IN ACTION

Thrilling Account of the Battle Against Nature's Blockade—Trials that Test the Fiber of Pole Hunters.

Commander Peary describes in the forthcoming Hampton's Magazine the terrific fight of the crew in forcing the Roosevelt through a sea packed with icebergs and icefloes. In one case it was necessary to dynamite the ice in order to save the ship from being crushed. "I think that none of the members of the expedition will ever forget the 30th of August," says Peary. "The Roosevelt was kicked about the floes as if she had been a toy ball. The game began about 4 o'clock in the morning. I was in my cabin trying to get a little sleep with my clothes on, for I had not dared to remove them for a week. My rest was cut short by a shock so violent that before I realized that anything had happened I found myself on deck—a deck that inclined to starboard some twelve or fifteen degrees. I ran, or rather, climbed the deck to the port side and saw what had happened. A big floe rushing past with the current had plucked up the grounded berg to which we were attached by the hawsers and dashed it against the Roosevelt and clear along

PROPOSED LAW REFORMS

Plan to Substitute Principles for Precedents in Legal Practice.

PROFESSION WELCOMES THE PLAN

Nebraskans Lead Their Support and Approval to a Work of Surpassing Importance.

The proposed American corpus juris, designed "as an expression of the law in the words of master minds, from which all lawyers may draw inspiration," is the subject of an extended explanation and discussion in the current issue of the Green Bag. The work is to be a compilation of legal principles drawn from American laws and court decisions, formulated by the best legal talent available. Endorsement of the project by the legal profession is well nigh unanimous, scores of letters of approval being printed in connection with the discussion. Among the endorsers are General Charles F. Manderson of Omaha, Judge Frank Irvine, formerly on the District and supreme bench of Nebraska, now dean of the law school of Cornell university, and Judge Roscoe Pound, formerly of the Nebraska supreme court, now professor of law in the Chicago university. Their letters follow:
General Manderson.
Your proposition is to bring order out of chaos, for "cannot imagine anything more chaotic than the present condition of the law in this country.

With the conflict and variance in the laws of different states and the constant disturbances that arise because of this variance there seems to be an absolute necessity for some uniformity of legislation upon all subjects that affect the commercial welfare and domestic happiness of the people of the United States. Our empire within an empire make frequently disastrous and ruinous conflict, and there is no remedy for evils that increase as time goes on except an education not only of the legal profession, but of the masses, to the necessity of greater uniformity in legislation. The American Bar association has had this in view for years, but, unfortunately, has been able to accomplish very little to bring about the much needed result.

Your project is worthy of all credit and aid, and I greatly hope that before much time elapses your effort will be crowned with full success. Anything that I can do at any time to forward this excellent work I will gladly do.
My own opinion has been so fully covered by those with whom you have had correspondence that I feel that nothing is needed from me except to endorse what has been so well put by my friend, Everett P. Wheeler, Esq., when he quotes from Lord Bacon in saying: "That a country in which the laws are indefinite and uncertain is subject to an iron servitude." We can be rid of some of this servitude by uniformity of state legislation, and a definite and well-entrenched doctrine firmly established showing the distinction between legislation that should be extended to the states and that that should come from the congress of the United States.
I have examined with some care your plan for a corpus juris. There cannot be the slightest doubt that such a work well carried out would be the greatest contribution ever made to our law. While the indeterminate value to the profession, its chief advantage would accrue to the people as a whole who suffer more than any except lawyers realize from the present enormous volume and confused state of the precedents from which the law in a given case must be developed.

The undertaking is colossal and beset by difficulties. On the one hand, the work must be authoritative. Comparatively little good would be accomplished by a mere comprehensive treatise on the law, which would relegate us to the same study of old cases as the only real authority. The work should solve the problem so long confronting us and arising out of the enormous and indeed appalling growth of the reports. We cannot hope for any work which would enable us to throw on the junk pile the thousands of accumulated volumes, but we may reasonably hope for a work which will render a resort to them rarely necessary, and when necessary at all chiefly for historical purposes. On the other hand, legislative codification leads us into a new and inner maze without getting us out of the old one. The authority must be derived not from legislative fiat but from the character of the work itself.

Judge Pound.
I do not doubt that such a work as you propose, though difficult of execution, because it would be a pioneer work in the system of our Anglo-American law, is entirely feasible. The utility of the work is beyond dispute, and, I might fairly say, beyond measure. Our jurisprudence of rules is breaking down seriously, and in the process is incurring seriously public respect for law. A great deal of our law in books is not law in action, not only because the mass of legal detail is too cumbersome for actual administration, but often because, at the crisis of decision judges cannot but feel that they ought not to apply the mechanical, but extremely slow progress of academic detail they find in the books in the hard and fast way that rules, as distinct from principles, are to be applied. But where are they to find the principles? There are suggestions here and there, and a powerful judge now and then draws a principle from the mass of rules. In general, however, the courts are too often forced to reason by analogy from the large equities of the cause and forage in the books for cases to support it. This makes our written opinions a mere ritual. Sooner or later a system of our law must come. Such a work must be done for its own sake. It must come from (a) the gradual, but extremely slow progress of academic research and publication, from (b) a state-appointed commission or (c) from some private foundation. Commercial enterprise will demand immediate profits—and this work must be done thoroughly for ultimate not immediate results. The work of the commissioners on uniform state laws, for example, will not sell, but will estimate its value?
It has been said that the crimes of a Bonaparte and the bigotry of a Justinian will be forgotten because at their bidding the rough places in the way of justice were made smooth. The patron under whose auspices the way of American justice shall be made smooth will have done no less and will be the greater in that he devoted his own while they commanded the resources of states.
