

JAMES PHILIPS DRAWS LIFE

Slayer of Marsh Hamilton Guessed Right on His Fate.

BARELY ESCAPED DEATH VERDICT

Jury Once Stood Ten to Two for Gallops, but Phillips Says He Doesn't Care Anything About It.

By a narrow squeak Jim Phillips has escaped the gallows. The man who shot down Marsh Hamilton came very near having a verdict of death by hanging rendered against him not long before a verdict of life imprisonment was reached on the thirteenth ballot.

Phillips sat in the court room Thursday morning to hear the verdict announced and it was with an unblinking face that he heard the pronouncement of "imprisonment for the term of his natural life."

He was not shocked nor disappointed, for, as he told a reporter for The Bee, the other day, he expected a conviction.

"I'm 4-4 lucky," was his first comment when he spoke to a deputy sheriff after hearing the verdict.

At the county jail he was locked in his cell on the first floor, where he had been since the night that he surrendered himself as the slayer of Marsh Hamilton.

Phillips turned his face toward the man who spoke and looked at him curiously for a moment. His face was set and hard.

"Oh, I don't care—not for anything in the whole wide world."

"Are you sorry now that you got yourself up?" he was asked.

"I said I don't care," Then his voice fell into an inarticulate mumble.

A prisoner passed by and paused a moment, broom in hand, to look in on the prisoner. The locked-in folk of the jail had not yet learned of the fate of the man in the cell.

"How'd you come out, Jim?" he asked.

"Oh, all right," was the quiet answer of the convicted man, who this time did not even look up.

Jury Comes In. The jury, itself, came into the criminal court room of district court at 9:30 a. m., looking far less haggard and worn than most juries that have been out all night and this because the twelve men had been in bed since midnight.

At that hour they were taken by a bailiff to the Merchant's hotel, according to the direction of the judge who presided at the trial.

When 10 o'clock came and no verdict had been reached the court's orders were that the jury should be locked up for the night and that verdict or no verdict it should not be brought in until Thursday morning.

The jury did take its thirteenth and last ballot as the clock struck the hour of 12. Without vouchsafing information to anyone that their labors had been concluded, the jurymen went to the Merchant's and slept that night.

After breakfast the body was brought back to court and the verdict given in.

Crime He Committed. The crime for which Phillips is convicted was committed the night of August 31, at Hamilton's saw mill, near Florence. Phillips was jealous of Hamilton on account of his wife.

Mrs. Phillips has denied her husband's charges from the first as to her personal conduct and she has shown some resentment at times against him.

Phillips completely lost himself after going to the hut of Hamilton in Florence that dark night and shooting him to death. Through a simple young man he eluded both the Omaha police and Douglas county officials so successfully that they never once had a line of his whereabouts. They, of a sudden one day he walked into the city jail, announced himself as Hamilton's slayer and surrendered himself.

This stands out as the strongest argument of all, his friends think in favor of the claim that he is unbalanced.

F. B. Kennard Sells Out to Enter Politics

Succeeded by Local Syndicate, Which Will Establish Paint Factory in Omaha.

The Kennard Paint and Glass company has changed hands and the new proprietors will take possession about March 1.

F. B. Kennard, who has been identified with the commercial life of Omaha for the last forty years, will retire at that time to engage in another field of work.

When asked what his new field was to be he laughingly replied, "politics."

A syndicate of Omaha business men bought out Mr. Kennard. Their names are not yet disclosed. They will have ample capital and their first move after taking possession will be to install a paint factory in Omaha in the up-town district.

Mr. Kennard said he thought the time was ripe for Omaha to have a paint factory and that the new concern had the same idea.
