What Bridegrooms Wear

TIQUETTE decrees the correct garb for men, quite as much as for women, and latterly there has come a change of fashion in masculine array. For example, the time honored frock cost has been supplanted by a cutaway and it is in the latter shape that a man must appear for his wedding if the ceremony takes place

Precisely the points that distinguish a formal cutaway, as one might call it, from a lounging coat, are to be told by a competent tailor, and care must be taken that the difference is renounced. The waistcoat usually is made of the same material as the ceat, although fancy cloth may be used. It should be single breasted. Trousers should be gray mixture or stripe. Boots should be patent leather, utton, with calf tops, and the tie light gray or pearl. This same dress is suitable for the men of the wedding party, as the only difference in the attire is in the color of the trousers and ties. These must be darker in color are relegated to the use of elderly For traveling, a sacque coat, either double breasted or single, is correct. The color and cloth may be any choice.

the wearer pleases. For all formal occasions in the day time patent leather button boots, with calf tops are correct, and it is safe to say that on all day occasions of "dress" pearl gray ties are the color to be chosen. Four-in-hands are the know tied.

For an evening wedding a man wears a full dress foat, which means one with tails. Dinner coats, improperty called "Tuxedos." are merely evening lounge coats and are not dressy. With a tail coat a white tie must be worn. and a white waistcoat, single breasted, according to the latest fashion. White glaves are imperative. Shirts must have plain white busoms, pleated ones being suitable only with dinner inciceus.

With a tail cost or a formal cutaway a high silk hat must be worn. If flowers are put in the buttonhole they should be white.
