Census Guesses Are Fabrications

Durand Says Returns from Enumerators Not Received, So Published Stories Lack Foundation.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—In denial of a number of published stories giving what purported to be estimates of the population of some of the cities of the United States as shown by the new census, C. Dana Durand, director of the census, declared emphatically that no official announcement of the population of any city or state in the United States or of the United States as a whole will be made for some time to come, and, further, that the fact that these returns from the enumerators have not been received emphasizes the impossibility of any official statement or even estimate being given at this time."

SIDELIGHTS ALONG WASHINGTON BYWAYS

Once a month there appears upon the streets of Washington an aged man who bears a striking resemblance to General Robert E. Lee. The man is, in fact, General George Washington Curtis Lee, a son of the leader of the confederate army, who served as a major general in the rebel army.

General Lee's regular visits to Washington are not for the purpose of renewing old acquaintances. He always has a more practical mission. As soon as he leaves the train the old soldier walks to the Ebbit house barber shop. A negro barber greets him courteously, the general steps into the chair and has his hair cut. After leaving the barber shop he steps across the street to the law offices of his son, Robert E. Lee, where he remains for a few minutes. He then takes an early afternoon train back to his home in Fairfax county.

General Lee is president emeritus of Washington and Lee university, of which institution his father also was president. The striking manner in which he resembles his famous father in every detail was illustrated by the sculptor who was selected to design the statue of General Lee which now stands in Statuary hall at the capitol. The sculptor had an excellent death mask of the confederate general, but was somewhat puzzled about the size of the hands until he was informed that General George Washington Custis Lee was the living image of his father. The sculptor thereupon took an impression of the hands of the son.

General Robert Lee, by the way, is the subject of much debate in some quarters at the present time, as the result of statements recently made by Senator Lodge of Massachusetts to the effect that he was not a citizen of the United States when he died. The proclamation of President Johnson granted amnesty to all confederate soldiers below the rank of colonel. All officers above that rank were required to take an oath of allegiance to the United States before being restored to citizenship. Senator Lodge has asserted that General Lee did not take that oath, although he advised his soldiers to do so. This statement has been disputed by some of Lee's followers, and officials of the congressional library have been requested to look up the records. They have been at work several days, but thus far have found no document to disprove the assertion of the Massachusetts senator.

"There is one congressional district in the state of Kentucky," said a member of the house from that state the other day, "where the democratic leaders have been discouraged in their efforts to oust Representative Don C. Edwards.

"Republicans had been sent to congress from that district for a long time by reason of the fact that it had been gerrymandered, and today the district stretches through nineteen counties. When Beckham was governor the democrats decided to make a determined effort to get out a big democratic vote. It was known that there were thousands of mountainers who did not go to the polls, principally because the polling places were far removed from their homes and because they did not have the means of transportation.

The democrats rounded up all the horses and mules they could rent and shipped them through the district. Willing workers were sent through the district to urge the mountainers to show their love of party by using these animals to get to the polls.

"There was no doubt about the willingness of the inhabitants of the Kentucky mountains to exercise the franchise when given an opportunity. They came down the hills in droves. The plan seemed to be working beyond the wildest dreams of the democratic leaders. In fact, they thought, a way had been discovered to turn what seemed to be an overwhelmingly republican district over to the democrats.

"Sad was the story which was revealed by the count of ballots. It was found that the republican majority was 33,000, which was about 11,000 more than the average. Hereafter if the mountain voters want to go to the polls they will have to provide their own transporation."

The Tired Business Man
Tells Friend Wife Jurors Are Condemned to Elocution

BY WALTER A. SINCLAIR.

"Why didn't the judge lock up the Heinze jury and take away newspapers and drinks?" asked Friend Wife.

"After they had been condemned to be electrocuted by lawyers, too," said the Tired Business Man. "What are we coming to? They are undoubtedly guilty of being eligible for jury duty and any man who can be found to be that now days ought to be locked up. At least long enough for a commission to examine them. I suppose that an appeal could be composed to the tune of 'Heinze jury pickled again.'

"I don't see what protection we are going to have from jurors being left at large to run amuck or a couple of mucks, and liable to eat too much pie or read the papers or even tip in a occasional libation during their three weeks or a month's confinement furthering the ends of justice. In our most popular trials it has been the custom for jurors to close up their business and retire, bid farewell to their families, leaving them without visible means of support, get discharged if they were employes, take a final bath and home made meal, lay in a supply of clean linen and immure themselves in the cloister.

"For men in need of complete change of atmosphere nothing could be more completely different than the ripe atmosphere of a court room. True, a jury box chair is not as comfortable as an upholstered leather swivel chair and one cannot perch his feet on the railing and smoke during the equinoxial weeks of the trade winds, known as noise by counsel. But it is a regular life. The keeper leads his charges into the pen at the same time each day, unless one of the lawyers has an important engagement, and they are taken back nightly.

"Jurors are treated with consideration, almost with kindness, in spite of their benighted condition. You never heard of a keeper beating a juror, although 'tis rumored in the bazar that one juror occasionally beats another, but only at the enchanting pastime called poker. Considering that one can have a game every night without having to square it with his wife,

"TRADE WINDS."

I think being locked up has its advantages.

"Of course jurors often may wonder peevishly why they should be locked up while the defendant can come and go at will, can get at home if he has one, can see a show, can discuss the case with somebody if he dares and can read the newspaper accounts until he gets mad. But then he is the defendant, while they are only the jurors, who ought to be glad they are not shot at sunrise even if the appealing lawyer sometimes asserts they were half shot.

"Think of having to exist daily and nightly with eleven other strangers who have been selected to try a defendant and then of being admonished not to discuss the case! Have to eat it, inhale it and live it daily and be just bursting to mention something about it and then have to stifle it... I suppose a case could be appealed if a juror talked in his sleep.

"The newspapers served to jurors are nothing but rims, with all the interesting reading and cartoons cut out. Even harmless stories, which one is dying to read, are liable to be prfinted on the reverse side of the sheet containing an account of the trial and gets censored out. But it serves them right for being jurors. They are treated as defectives; lawyers standing a are prescribed, they are talked to as though they were deaf, their hours and habits ar prescribed, they are talked to as though they were devoid of reasoning. They ought to be locked up. I wonder why the custom doesn't go further and lock up the judges, the prosecutors and the court janitor—everybody but the defendant?"

"Women would make good jurors," observed Friend Wife, irrelevantly.

"I said jurors are not allowed to discuss a case," said the Tired Business Man.

Daily Health Hint

In our climate, subject, as we often are, to rapid changes and extremes of temperature, the physical system is naturally more or less debilitated. In this connection we are predisposed to colds, fever, and other troubles. Fruits and acid vegetables are known to be good correctives for this debilitated condition.

The Onlooker

Paterson, (N. J.) man was denied citizenship papers on airing his knowledge to the extent of declaring that "Teddy" Roosevelt was not president and that the laws of the land were made in Passiac by "Joe" Cannon. The fellow may have been half right at that, but things that jar us must be discouraged.

See that Mr. Hammerstein will give no operatic performances next season in this country. And this takes in Philadelphia.

Cincinnati lad has been taken to a hospital to have an operation performed by a surgeon to make him a better boy. Um! In the old days when persons lived in homes instead of apartments, an operation on the back parlor by Dr. Ma with a slipper would have sufficed.

Civil service commission will hold an examination on May 7 to determine the fitness of applicants for the position of postmaster of Wheatfield, near Saltsburg, Pa. The job pays 18 cents a day. Stop that laughing, out there! Said we were going to have economy and we meant it.

Governor Fort of New Jersey, has refused the offer as a gift of the costume of an Indian rajah, valued at $25,000 and including a jewelled belt, with jewelled sword and white broadcloth uniform. Too bad. The legislators hight have liked to utilize the garb at the high jinks attending the next adjournment.

Baltimore resident, aged 60, has put in a bid for the frugality medal by saving his dead wife's clothes until he found a woman they would fit before remarrying.

In England they are planning to imitate the French by choosing forty immortals. Better wait until Colonel Roosevelt arrives; then they'll only have to worry getting thirty-nine, or he'll take the job off their shoulders entirely.

Incidentally, how far did the knowledge of a death penalty act as a deterrent to Albert Wolter?—Boston Globe. It was no deterrent. The common immunity from punishment of evildoers was a strong incentive, though.

Might rig up an extra chair in Sing Sing for the week of June 6, in the event of Lawyer Scott, finding Fred Ahner, "aged 21, short and thick set, with a broad chest, and slightly bald over the forehead," the mysterious person said to be concerned in the death of little Ruth Wheeler. That's all.

Peter Regan, brought to bar after a lapse of five years for the murder of R. W. Joyce, pleads guilty to assault, the charge is changed to meet the plea, and with nothing worse ahead than one of those convenient indeterminate sentences, there is nothing to do but sing "Long Live the System," call the next case and repeat the performance. While we love to mouth "The mills of God grind slowly," and so on, some persons seem determined to remind us that at times the motive power is stopped.

We Resent It.

On only one possible hypothesis can we account for the story that comes from Norway to the effect that Colonel Roosevelt spent two hours with King Haakon, drinking tea. That is, that the cable company was crowded with business, and couldn't spend the time necessary to send the right name of the beverage, relying on the discernment of the colonel's friends out west to understand what was really meant.

Can you imagine the hero of San Juan, the terror of the African jungle, the man who taught the octupus to jump through, lie down, roll over and be dead, drinking tea? Or the ruler of the Norsemen, even if they have descended a long, long way from the days of Sven of the Forked Beard, King Olaf, and others of song and story, making a night of it with a favored guest, over a dish of tea? Far be it from such.

Who could say "Skoal!" over a cup of tea? And what would a wassail bout be on such a drink?

With all our force, The Bumble Bee resents the imputation that Teddy has come down to tea, when he is setting in to tell a story to a real gent, and certainly not when he is hobnobbing with a king. And if you don't believe it ask Seth Bullock.

Just Wait.

Whatever load of woe may have oppressed you as the result of the hard winter; whatever apprehensive thought may have slipped its sinister self into your soul you may now be assured that a holy calm is coming to your perturbed spirit. The worst has passed, and the bright gonfalon of hope (whatever that is) again floats high above the citadel.

A paean of praise is heard, and all is well again. Joyful notes of busy workmen arose the slumbering echoes along the city streets; hosts of tolling men chatter volubly in the liquid accents of Sunny It', and all is well in Omaha again.

Why this change in the situation?

Oh, nothing much. Tom Flynn has his new auto, and the voters are proud to think that they are directed by so swell a boss.

That's all! Just wait until you see Tom, and then you'll understand.

Bullock Admits It.

DEADWOOD, S. D., May 6.—(Special Telegram.)—Seth Bullock says it's so, and that he would have shot any son of a gun who had dared to peep. Moreover, he says it was the day after he had explained to the colonel what the Indians meant when they ejaculated "Bushwa!" at the end of each of his periods.

Joe Gossage was up from Rapid City today and says he recalls the incident vividly, especially because it reminds him so strongly of the day Colonel Bryan and Governor "Andy" Lee spoke at Rapid City during the same campaign. Colonel Bryan had just finished his exhortation in behalf of the sacred ratio, and Governor Lee was called on to make a speech. He stood at the front of the platform and said:

"Ladies ant Yentlemens: I Be not no speaker, like Mr. Bryan bees; Aye be yust plain Swede man, and governor; but I got same toughts on dis har question like Mr. Bryan has. I t'ink it been yust the same mit wheat and silver—bot' bin dollar bushel."

A Lie Nailed.

RED BANK, N. J., May 6.—The report emanating from Coney Island to the effect that Bill Cody invested in a hair cut one evening the front end of the week is nailed as a lie. Your correspondent has investigated and is pleased to report that thus far Colonel Cody stands innocent of shattering tradition. Bill McCune is sifting the report with a view to ascertaining its origin.

Burglars Make Rich Haul.

HEBRON, Neb., May 6.—Burglars invaded the home of Colonel Abner Bloodgood, six miles southwest of Hebron last night and carried away six prize porkers. The hogs were about ready for market, and Colonel Bloodgood, as a precaution, had placed them in the parlor for safe-keeping. The burglars evidently used skeleton keys as a means of entrance, and it is supposed that the squeal of hogs was rendered somnolent by copious doses of chloroform. A tray of diamonds carelessly left on a table in the reception hall, through which the burglars passed, was unmolested. On top of the tray of jewels, the burglars left this note:

> We care not who has the diamonds. What we want is hogs.

After removing the hogs from the parlor, the marauders lifted them into one of Colonel Bloodgood's 48 h. p. automobiles and sped away. A reward of $1,000 has been offered and the colonel humbly promises to ask no questions.

*South Omaha papers please copy.

Whoa, Imogene!

No, Imogeno, that rumbling you hear was not a seismic echo; the Peerless One over at Lincoln was merely giving private expression to his thoughts concerning the Otoe county commisioners.

We Hear

That the Peerless One may carry a tent with him when he goes to Otoe county.

That the movement to change the name of South Omaha to Hide Park will probably be placed in cold storage.

That if—
John O. Yelser,
Early riser,
Way out in Dundee,
Would practice law
In Omaha
Taxpayer he must be.

That the steepes of Russia are tame compared with Omaha's court house steps.

That the express companies expect to do a corking good business in Lincoln.

That the wets captured Omaha yesterday—but it was only a wet water victory.

That the Peerless One kept his prohibition views bottled up a mighty long time, considering how easy it is to grab a corkscrew.

THE GENTLE CYNIC

If you are going to ask a man to take your part, be sure he doesn't take a fancy you have.

Some people never have a show because they are always waiting for free passes.

Money causes some people quite as much worry as the lack of it causes other people.

A girl shouldn't have a pinched look just because a fellow gives her a squeeze.

Wealth may not bring true happiness, but lots of us us would be satisfied with the imitation.

There are lots of different kinds of fools, but some fellows try to be all of them at once.

When a politician lends his influence he generally charges a pretty high rate of interest.

It takes a pretty strong pull for some fellows to pull themselves together.

A SPRING RAIN.

From the Gotham Gazette.
Monday's rain it did lots of good;
It came down good and plenty.
Oh! it made everything so green
All over Westchester county.

The trees in verdure they are clad,
The grass is emerald greenery.
The plants are beginning to look nice,
Quite beautiful is the scenery.

What can be more pretty, nice
Than an early day in spring?
It is of outward signs of a day.
I have endeavored to sing.
—Euphemia Seamans Simpson.
