Smallpox Patient Terrifies Police

Walks Into the Station Unannounced and is Huddled to the Detention Hospital.

M. T. Hennington, who gives his occupation as a cook, threw the police station into a fit of terror when he walked in Friday morning with his face all broken out with smallpox. Police Surgeon Standeven immediately pronounced the case one of smallpox. Health Commissioner Connell was called and verified Dr. Standeven's diagnosis. Hennington says that he has been a cook around Omaha, working in some of the prominent places, but of late has been out of work and has been sleeping in box cars, where he probably contracted his trouble.

BURGLAR SUSPECTS FOR TRIAL

Three Waive Preliminary Hearing and Four Ask for Immediate Trial.

Three suspected burglars waived preliminary examination and four asked for immediate trial, when seven men in the gang caught Sunday and afterwards connected with a series of crimes were arraigned before Judge Crawford Friday morning. The four men who offered to stand trial were held over to a hearing Saturday in order that witnesses they claim for their defense may be produced. Those who waived preliminary trial were

RIVAL FOR THE LANE CUT-OFF

Short Line from Omaha Has Counterpart Near Delaware Water Gap.

One of the most remarkable and picturesque as well as utilitarian undertakings in railroad engineering in all the world's modern annals is rapidly approaching completion on the Lackawanna railroad east of Delaware Water Gap. This end of it has a wonderful concrete bridge, crossing the Delaware river near Stateford—the largest concrete bridge in the world. It is 1,450 feet long, with five arches of 150 feet span and a number of shorter arches carrying the track some seventy-five feet above high water. The abutments are sixty-one feet below the surface of the ground to solid rock, in order to afford absolute stability. There are several other large concrete bridges on the line.

Much interest is being shown not only by the railroads, but by various governments, in the construction of the Lackawanna cut-off, and representatives of the latter have spent much time in going over the work. An engineer of construction employed by the Austrian government has been on the ground.

The work under construction is a double track, low grade cut-off, extending from Lake Hopatcong, N. J., to Stateford, Pa., a point on the west bank of the Delaware river just east of the famous Water Gap. This new cut-off will reduce the distance between New York and Buffalo from 411 to a little less than 400 miles, and as the Lackawanna railroad is now by a number of miles the shortest line between the great lakes and the Atlantic seaboard, this reduction of distance by over 2½ per cent will necessarily have a material effect upon transportation interests. The cut-off line is twenty-eight and a half miles long and takes the place of the present line of thirty-nine and three-fourths miles. The new line is but three miles longer than an air line, and four-fifths of it is absolutely straight.

The initial work of the cut-off was begun August 1, 1908, and the progress made indicates that the entire work will be completed within the period set, which was the summer of 1911—Philadelphia Record.

BISHOP SCANNELL RETURNS

Head of Omaha Diocese Back After Attending Consecration of Six Bishops at St. Paul.

Bishop Scannell of Omaha has returned from the big meeting of Catholic dignitaries in Minneapolis, held in St. Paul Thursday. He was accompanied by Right Rev. Bishop Keane of Cheyenne, Wyo., who was the bishop's guest today. Bishop Keane left Friday night for his home in Wyoming. The local priests who were present at the consecration ceremony of the six bishops in St. Paul were Rev. D. P. Harrington, Rev. P. C. Gannon and Rev. Stephen L. Dowd.

MacGahan, like most Americans who amount to anything, was born in the brush and bred in poverty. His birthplace was near Lexington, O., and in 1844 that section of the United States was not the hub of the world. He died in Constantinople in 1878. Half of his thirty-four years of life were rich with experience. His career was picturesque, but its net results were not negligible.

As a youth MacGahan tried this and that calling in the west and studied law at night. Afterward he went to Europe to study in Brussels. Upon the outbreak of the Franco-German war in 1870 he went to the front as a correspondent for the New York Herald, to whose columns he had contributed unsolicited matter. This was the beginning of his career as a war correspondent. Three years later he asked permission to accompany a Russian expedition sent out to smash the Mohammedan brigands of Khiva, a vassal state of Russia traversed by the Oxus and skirting the Sea of Aral, and inhabited by Tajiks, Uzbeks, Karakalpakhs, Turcomans. The object of the expedition was to impress an outlaw Khan with the majesty of Russia. Forbidden to accompany the expedition, MacGahan organized one on his own account, crossed the waste places of central Asia, arrived in advance of the Russians, after enduring incredible hardships, and was on the ground to report the fall of Khiva for his paper. His report was regarded by officers as a masterpiece of military journalism.

In Cuba MacGahan reported the Virginius affair, the same year, when war was almost caused between Spain and the United States because of the Bulgarian vessel, and Tornado captured the American vessel, and Skipper Joseph Fry and thirty-five men were shot as filibusters on their way to aid Cuba in its ten years' war with Spain.

When he was reporting the Carlist uprising in Spain, clad in a Carlist uniform, MacGahan was captured and sentenced to be shot, but was saved by the intervention of the United States minister. In 1875, still in search of adventure, MacGahan went with the Pandora Arctic expedition. The following year he joined the Turkish army as representative of the London News, and as a describer of the Bulgarian atrocities—which stood the test of hostile investigation and remain today a chapter in European history—attracted the attention of the world. In behalf of Bulgaria he appealed to Russia, and in the Russo-Turkish war that followed he was at the front. Hailed as a deliverer by the Bulgarians, whose independence resulted largely from his journalistic "muck-raking" of Turkey, the intrepid young man from Ohio became a hero in that country. While nursing a friend afflicted with fever he contracted a fatal illness and died in the Turkish capital, "Under the Northern Lights." "Turkish Atrocities in Bulgaria" and "Campaigning on the Oxus and the Fall of Khiva" survive him, and the Ohio legislature made

AN ADVENTUROUS JOURNALIST

Ohio Urged to Honor a Native Son with a National Statue.

It is suggested by one of the New York papers that Ohio should present to Statuary hall a marble or bronze presentation of Januarius Aloysius MacGahan.

How many American hero worshipers there must be who have hardly heard of MacGahan! Yet he was heroic in a useful service, and died as the result of his obedience to the scriptural injunction to minister to the sick.

Refined Coffee

Have you tried it? If you have you are still using it. If you have not, it's time to get busy. It is very different from the old style crushed coffee with its dust and chaff. We have the only machines in Omaha for producing steel cut sifted coffee. It's better flavored; it's easier to make. No egg necessary—it settles itself. And it costs no more than the common kind—Mocha Mixture, 35c—3 lbs., $1. Excelsior Blend.....
