Class of 272 Gathers for the Cere. mony and Dr. Vance Makes Presentation of Certifieates to the Officers.

Rarely, if ever, has any stage contained at one time more of grace, beauty, character, optimism, ideal fancy and hope fulfilled, than at the Orpheum last night during the high school commencement exer-

One hundred and sixty-six girls in the flush of youth, exalted to charming humor by the excitement of graduation, arrayed in purest white of fluffy fussiness, with coiffures elegantly arranged, ribbons tastefully placed, and hearts attuned to happy harmony that shone forth from dancing eyes of blue and gray, black and hazei, brown and changeable-a regiment of darling heroines fondly viewed by parents and friends, giving love back to proud eyes that signaled happily from every seat in or- Closing Exercises

Mixed with the thrilling array of beauty might be discovered, by crose observation a fair proportion of the 166 boys whose names appear on the graduation list. They sat modestly, as became them and only Seventh and Eighth Grades Give the group constituting the cadet officers got into the calcium for a hurrah.

The certificates of efficiency in the military work of the high school were presented prior to the deliverance of the first essay. The large group of officers enhereafter it will be the cadet regiment high school battalion. As he spoke the word "war" in his talk a bugle sounded officers marched on the stage. All the girls thrilled delightfully and the audience gave greeting of admiration with right good Commissions for Officers.

Then Dr. Vance, chairman of the committee on teachers of the school poard, presented each officer with his certificate, as the serious faced warriors of peace saluted and steadily fell back to place. It was a picture good to see, presenting a group juil of promise. Some there were of the stature of grenadiers, and some of smallest physique, but all well set up and in regulation attire without a blemish. Nearly every name brought out applause from admiring onlookers.

When the orators and essayists of the class took the stage, one after another, they faced boxes full of the members of the classes of '05, '08, '09, '11, with class banners and colors artistically draped and waving. And immediately in front were what seemed to them 1,000,000 fans, programs and handkerchiefs, backed by smiling faces full of encouragement, eyes brimlung with telepathic urging. The six chosen ones caught the spirit, and never a faiter or a faise note was in evidence. Orators Begin.

Richard Barnes had for his theme, "Success as Determined by Service." He asked, "Which of the ideals of success is ours? Is it wealth, is it publicity, is it fame? Do any of them satisfy after all. We can easily see that at heart they are all selfish, and therefore all wrong. For the man who lives for self and works for selfish ends is a charlatan at heart, no matter how great his powers. The man who lives for seif true meaning and order of the universe. Heat success is measured, not by what one Hugo Biack. pets out of a community, but by what one puts into a community. This was the central thought, consistently and cleverly carried out Ruth Sheldon told of "A Trip Through the Canadian Rockies," and as she proceeded one went with her through the wheat fields of Alberta, by lonesome homesteads, on into the mountains, and rested by cool lakes, sat down amid pineclad bills, granite slopes and flashing gluciers It was a refreshing picture, sketched with light strokes and interesting precision; in thought excellent, in construction true, and in presentation most satisfactory.

"The Average Man."

Nellie Eigutter placed before the audience "The Average Man" in a manner to bring out his good points and his great usefulness to the fullest. She divided the world, taken as a huge army, into three classes, "To the first belong the captains, who give the commands. In the third class are found not only the stragglers, but also the camp followers; not alone those who never keep step in the ranks, but likewise those who are a hindrance to society, who prey on their betters. As a happy medium between the two comes the second class, the soldiers in ranks, the average men. They are the ones who bear the bruni of the battle of life. They carry out the commands of their superiors; they make those plans a success.

"Dreams of future glory will not come true unless 'high of heart and strong of hand,' by his own sterling qualities and deeds of might the average man makes them a reality."

"The Literature of Israel" found a sympathetic portraya) at the hands of Marie She described the Bible as a mixture of prose, poetry, drama and lyrics. and said:

"As in every people's literature is reflected their philosophy and morals, so the Bible reflects the character of the race to which it belongs; the purity of their lives, the stern demand for perfect justice and purity in others and the wonderful faith in God-a faith which, expressed in the words of that most perfect type of philosopher, Job, has enabled them to bear with such unflinching courage the years upon years of misfortune which has been their

Rush of School Life.

Treating of "The Conservation of the High School Student's Energy," Stuart Gould let his hearers into some of the weaknesses of educational methods today. He took several opportunities to shoot straight at the bull's-eye when describing the spirit of rush, the rule of continual hurry, that governs even the school children in this day. The conclusion was that, even with all that can be alleged against it, the high school education does fit boys and girls for taking a good and useful place in the work of the world.

Miss Irms Gross, daughter of one of the members of the first class graduated from the Omaha High school, Addle Gladstone, made "A Plea for the Graduation Essay." It was a compelling plea, too, full of fetching bits of quiet humor, here and there sched with just a hint of piquant sarcasm for the cartoonists and funny paragraphers, who about this time of the year turn their attention to the lads and lasses leaving school for more serious activities. She held that "If a person waits till his judgment is mature to conceive ideals he is rather likely not to form any. Ideals form the necessary stepping stones to higher and

"Each graduate is going out into the world with the idea of doing, and if the graduation essay is a sincere evolving of the idea into the thought, it is one link of the great chain, and as such has an excuse
