Senator Bacon rose with asperity. The senator from Colorado was entirely wrong: his ship wasn't even an also ran in that affair of transatlantic premiership. The boat that first steamed across was an entirely different one.

That made Senator Lodge mad, because he's a historian, and always knows. He named another one and said that he could very serious and solemn.

Senator Gailinger of New have been assistant secretary of the navy, Hampshire broke away from the New Eng- and if he hadn't been assistant secretary land syndicate to support the theory of he couldn't have got his Rough Riders sent Senator Bacon, and the discussion grew to San Juan hill, and if he hadn't been at San Juan he couldn't have been governor, and if he hadn't been governor he couldn't ship City of Savannah, which, he said, have gone up to the vice presidency, and if everybody knew turned the trick first. he hadn't been vice president—and so on. So, anyway, Roosevelt thinks Lodge saved his bacon for him at the turning point in his career. Roosevelt and Lodge agree about politics about like oil and

The Tired Business Man

BY WALTER A. SINCLAIR. "Poets are having a lively time lately," observed Friend Wife. "One was barred from re-entering the country, and another was sent to Blackwell's Island workhouse Can't we endure them?" "Poets are born, not made-to work," paraphrased the Tired Business Man. 'Since the time that Homer smote his bloomin' lyre down to the last one T. R. smote, poets have had a lively time. Any day in the base ball news you read about days of curved pitching and inside ball, that is so completely inside that none of the paying spectators see it, although the mental Titans in the press box save it along for magazine stuff. "I think there should be some uniform rule for poets-and by that I don't mean London-Paris-Hamburg that there should be a rule compelling them to wear a uniform with distinguish-23 ing horizontal stripes of black and gray. It seems incongruous that while they're letting one poet out of prison in Minnesots they should be sending another to the coop in New York and barring a third from entering the country on the ground that he might prove a charge on the public. Everybody knows that most poets are not merely a charge, but an affliction on the public; still, in our obese prosperity we must have them like we must have appendicitis. Both equally necessary.

"The layman thinks that a poet should not mind living in a cell or a detention pen, because the ordinary person supposes that poets live in garrets or attics. That's because they confused them with the attic philosophers, who, by the way, lived known in the southern part of the state, on the ground floor in their day, just like the modern philosopher lives on the ground sausage. Poets have feelings and appetites just like ordinary persons. I doubt that you will find an actual poet among the tribe of long-haired bohemians (with the lower-case bo) who can be found in red inkeries dipping their flowing neckties in state. He is being assisted by Attorneys the flowing bowl.

"But to return to the poets. All right, we won't then. But you will observe the effect this pounding them had at the recent necessity in England for some poet to step up and knock out a poetical homer. The best the two hitters could do were little bunts. With this commercializing of poetry and the shutdown of the inspiration works can you wonder poets are discouraged?
