The principal address of the afternoon ssion was by W. T. Bancroft, president of the State Editorial association, who spoke on "the Influence of the Press in the Development of the State." He said:

"I certainly deem it a high honor to be called upon to take part in the program of the first conservation and development ongress of South Dakota, also an honor to the newspaper publishers of the state. whom I represent in the capacity of president of the press association, to be recognized as one of the important factors in the upbuilding and progress of this grand young state of ours. As a resident of the state for the last thirty-eight years and an active newspaper man for over half of that period, I am somewhat aware of what-The Influence of the Press in the Development of the State,' the subject of my address, has been.

"No one will take issue with me when I say that the press has been one of the greatest possible factors in the development and progress of our state and its moral welfare as well. The strong faith in the future of South Dakota manifested by every newspaper man in it has been one of the great characteristics of the average editor. Through all the times of adversity ness in which they saw the dawning of a day of rapid settlement such as we have seen the last ten years, and the mounting of that day's sun high into the heaven from whence it poured a flood of respiendent glory upon a lovely landscape dotted with the habitations of men-that they had a consciousness that the untenanted wilderness into which they had penetrated was shortly to pass from under the dominion of silence-that the stillness of its vast solitudes was about to be disturbed by the voices of a host of intelligent and newsweekly bulietins were showered every-They brought the people here by thousands, until now we have one of the grandest young states in the union-peopled by men and women of the strongest character and ever working to uplift humanity, backed by a press that ever stands for good clean government of the people, by the people and for the people. "One distinctive characteristic of the South Dakota newspaper is the breeziness of its air and style. It blows, because it has something to blow about. It has caught the healthful spirit of the fleet nessenger of our air, and before its blast evil crouches and disappears as malaria shrinks and vanishes before the vigorous sweep of our pure ozone. The press of the state deals in superlatives because it is published in a superlative country. Its exuberant language is required to fitly characterize a luxuriant development that finds no parallel for its rapidity in all ages since Eden was destroyed. It is ever watchful of the interests of their communities as well as the state as a whole, and no puglist was ever more ready to strike a head than is it to punish those who assail South Dakota.

Sacrifices Were Many. "The sacrifices that the early ploneer newspaper man put up with in 'boosting' for his new home is known to but few outside of the profession. Coming to a country where people were few and dollars still more so, the early editor many a time could hardly figure out where his next meal was coming from, nor how he was going to get a C. O. D. package of 'ready prints' from the nearest express office. But through all these difficulties and privations he was continually 'boosting.' His town-if there was one-his county and his state was the best and most prosperous on earth. Even if everybody in the place was prospering but the editor, he never stopped grinding out news matter for the material welfare of his home state. When 'press day' came he would tackle the old Washington hand press with a vim and enthusiasm that could not but count for the future welfare of the state.

"With such men as editors in the early history of our state, is it any wonder that we have progressed as we have, backed up with men of rugged character and homeloving women to assist in its upbuilding? "All honor to the press of yesterday, today and tomorrow. May we ever be ready and willing to assist them in standing up for South Dakota and standing for a square deal' for its inhabitants.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., July 1.—(Special.) The work of the local commercial club is expected to be supplemented in an effective manner by what is known as the Ad club, which has been organized here with the following officers: President, E. J. Mannix; vice president, E. Mortenson; secretary-treasurer, H. R. Hubbard. The club voted to become a member of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America which holds its annual meeting at Omaha this month. The new club will be repre sented at the Omaha meeting.
