Crawford Gets His Fee-Judge Leslie has decided the claim of Attorney Bryce Crawford against the estate of Mrs. Amanda Patrick and will award him $100 for services as special administrator, regular administrator and attorney. He claimed $3,000. Mrs. Patrick died about a year ago leaving an estate of about $30,000 to Josephine Knauer. Looking for the Mayor-Charles W. Hays, who used to punch cattle with Mayor Dahlman in 1888, now president of the U. and M. L. railway, stopped off in Omaha Tuesday to see the mayor. He was very much disappointed not to find him at home as they have not seen each other in twenty years. Mr. Hays returned to his home in Greenville, Mo. Special Guards for Crowds-Chief Donahue has ordered that special policemen be stationed at all hotels during the remainder of the week to protect the ad men and the Seegerfest visitors. The hotels are so crowded and the strangers are so thick that the field seems to be particularly ripe for pickpockets and sneak thieves unless some precautions are taken against them. Scantling Not Good for Massage Man is Given Thirty Days in Which to Think Up a Better Device. Would a loving husband massage his wife with a scantling? This is a question that might be fittingly discussed on the "home page" of the nation's newspapers, but it so happens that the courts took a whiff at it first. The case at issue is that of John Kottal, who stands charged with beating his wife at their home, 1416 South Fourteenth street. The woman is said to be badly injured. Police Chief Donahue arrested Kottal and Judge Crawford, after having read Beatrice Fairfax and other authorities, decided that his loving husband who massages his wife with a six-foot board ought to spend at least thirty days in jail. And so it is to be.

ERDMAN THIEF AND THUG

Lee Stitt, Union Pacific Watchman Identifies Prisoner. TRIED TO MURDER RAILROADER Detective Maloney Weaves Chain of Evidence About Alleged Dynamiter that Seems Unbreakable at Any Point. That Frank Erdman, now confined in the county jail awaiting trial for attempting to dynamite the Dennison residence, is the man who on August 30, 1907, shot and beat Lee Stitt, 200 Half Cass, Union Pacific watchman, until his life for weeks was but a faint hope, was conclusively proved Monday when Stitt identified the prisoner as his assailant. For a month Detective Steve Maloney has worked on the case and finally has succeeded in gathering a train of evidence which will settle the question of Erdman's history without a doubt. Erdman, accompanied by a pal named Thomas, was stealing brass from the box cars in the yard. They came from around a building where there were some empty box cars he fell and injured his side. He was then staying at the Madison home, Nineteenth and Leavenworth, where he said he was a boiler inspector. In order to make good his statement and avoid suspicion he would about once a week don a pair of grossy overalls, and thus attract good out and make his thefts of brass. It is said that he was in the business in wholesale manner, and maintained a horse and wagon for that purpose alone. Erdman was in hospital. His injury became decidedly worse, until after two months of doctoring himself, he turned to a local physician, who cared for him for over a month. The doctor then placed him in the Omaha General hospital, where he remained for nine weeks under the name of Erdman, which was his first time he was known under that cognomen. Dr. Summers was called and operated upon him. Ord Olson, who knew Erdman, went to the hospital to see him. He knew that he had been in the habit of stealing brass and accused him of shooting the watchman. Erdman replied by saying that he had to use his gun to get away. Olson now says he told some policemen of the matter, but they discredited it and it was not reported. Steve Maloney was then working on the case and was unable to get any clue as to the identity of the man. Learning of Erdman as a brass thief and his other history, Detective Maloney worked until the mystery was unraveled, and he found Erdman was the man. It is said that on one occasion, when Erdman wrote a note to Olson, who he knew was well acquainted with his true character and whom he feared would divulge it, asking Olson to meet him on the Douglas street bridge at the toll house. It was only through his persuasion that Olson did not go. To a man who was placed some time ago with Erdman in jail he told that if Olson had come when he wrote he would never have lived to do him any injury. Mr. Stitt, who identified Erdman, gave a detailed description of his recent visit. Since the time of the assault he has never fully recovered. Aguinardo Tills the Soil Now Once Noted Fighting Leader Leading Simple Life, Says Former Vice President Fairbanks. Aguinardo, the one-time famous fighting leader of the Filipinos, is now conducting a large estate in the interior of the island, about forty miles from Manila. Former Vice President Fairbanks met the former insurgent chieftain on his recent visit. "Aguinaldo drove in from his estate to meet us," said Mr. Fairbanks. "He impressed me as having the desire to keep out of politics and the turbulence of public life. He is conducting a rather extensive plantation and giving himself assiduously to the work. I believe, after a long drive and conversation with him, that Aguinardo is now favorably inclined to the American occupation of the islands and feels that his people are making very substantial progress. Conversing with him, one gets the idea that he is a fairly close student of affairs and is taking a large view of the movements going on about him. He leaves no doubt that farming is his business now, and that he is devoting his energies to it."

Girl's Scalp is Torn From Head in Smith Factory

Liberi Gaetana Suffers Very Severe Injury While Learning to Run Sewing Machine. Seventeen-year-old Liberi Gaetana, an Italian girl, is lying at St. Joseph's hospital in a critical condition. While working in the factory of the E. Smith Shirt company as an apprentice on a power sewing machine, her hair became caught in a shaft. In a moment her scalp was torn from her head, and with it the eyes lashes and the left ear. She was attended by Dr. T. J. Dwyer, who was successful in replacing the scalp, though he fears that the operation may not be permanently effective. He has more hope that the torn pieces of the ear may knit. Though the girl suffered greatly from the shock there is no danger of any fatal result of the accident. Miss Gaetana came to this country only about two weeks ago. She was working with her aunt, Mrs. Alfie Carracroll, 215 South Thirteenth street. Monday morning she began as an apprentice at the Smith factory and at the time of the accident was endeavoring to learn to operate one of the machines. She was unable to speak English, and it was not for some time known who she was. Before an Italian could be secured to tell what she said she was in an unconscious condition. The hospital authorities were unable Tuesday morning to state whether Liberi Gaetana would be able to recover or not. Her condition is considered usually critical, and of such a nature that it is impossible to tell what will be the result. She passed a better night at the hospital however, than was expected and those attending her are hopeful that signs of improvement will show themselves soon. What is the fascination of the large hat? No question has been usually considered one which included a study of its effect upon woman kind, but now it is vividly shown that the hat fascination extends beyond the realm of the tutored wearers thereof. A man has committed theft that he might obtain a hat, a large beflowered and beflowered hat. To be sure the man was not entirely himself when he attempted the deed, but was artificially stimulated by a too generous unblinking of the fruit of the grape-or hops. Staggering into Hayden's Tuesday morning he secured the notice of the attendants in the hat department, who were looking for more likely customers, and was able to lift one of the hats from its pedestal. Carefully buttoning it beneath his coat, a shabby coat, he tottered back to the elevator and safely reached the main floor. But before he had gained the outside door a bit of ribbon which refused to be held beneath the coat, betrayed him to a watchful detective and the rest of the journey was made in the city's public carriage and was without the solace of the stolen hat.
