Wonder if Mayor "Jim" has had that "stock" speech translated into German.

The twin summer fools are those who rock the boat and leave the forest fire burning.

John W. Kern announces, "I am surprised at nothing."

New Mr. Murdock has hit "Uncle Joe's" trail in Kansas.

Murdock gives Taft credit for aiding in the tariff fight.

Tennessee has presented Mr. Roosevelt with a marble slab.

Here, before we have got the auto half way under control, comes the airship challenging our patience and power.

So our democratic friends admit that they, too, have a few discords as well as the republicans.

Mayor Gaynor, one of his newspaper boosters says, is "the heaviest kind of presidential timber."

Bernard Shaw insists he can see nothing great about Colonel Roosevelt.

Tom Watson, we are informed, will soon take the stump.

The best thing about that Reno fight is that Jack London will not write a novel on it.

The Atlanta Constitution says hard work is the only cure for a vacation.

In New York a stakeholder may keep the money on the ground that gambling is illegal.

Problem in proportion: If Jack Johnson refuses $50,000 to tie down to Jeffries in the eighth round...

Two of the late nonpartisan democratic candidates for supreme judge are out as partisans seeking democratic nominations for congress.

Not a Good Analogy.

The Oregon plan applies to the election of United States senators precisely the same policy that has been already applied to the election of president.

This is the favorite analogy of advocates of the so-called Oregon plan of choosing United States senators.

The existing method of choosing the president is entirely different because presidential electors vote for the candidate who is the choice of those who have voted for them.

The fallacy of the pretended analogy is still more strikingly illustrated when an election in a state results in a split of the presidential ticket.

We suggest that the advocates of the Oregon plan put their pretended analogy with the electoral college in cold storage.

The Gompers Case.

The announcement that the Bucks Stove company will not further prosecute Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell and Frank Morrison as the executive officials of the National Federation of Labor...

It should be remembered that what these men were sentenced for was the writing and publication, by pen and public speech, of an appeal to union workers after the court had granted an injunction restraining such appeals.

It is therefore a matter no longer for the Bucks Stove company to settle, but for the highest tribunal in the land to decide.

Importance of Good Roads. The third National Good Roads congress, which holds its sessions at Niagara Falls, July 28 to 30...

Nothing could be worse in the national life than the deliberate, systematic and persistent distortion of truth to destroy confidence in public men honored with high official position.

and reduced time to the minimum. It has increased the price of farm land and the price of horse flesh.

But after all, with all this magnificent progress and its results before us, the good roads movement is but in its infancy.

Conventions that Count. The Ad men's convention, which has been holding its session in Omaha, is the kind of a convention a busy, bustling city likes to entertain.

Learn to Walk. Walking is a national habit with the Englishman and undoubtedly it has proved to be a most wholesome habit, contributing vastly to the health and longevity of the people.

Native Springs in Action. Fifteen thousand Americans have returned to their own land from the Alberta section of the Canadian northwest, in nine months.

Remind Him of It. A new vein of coal seven miles wide and sixty-five miles long has been found in Pennsylvania.

Postal Banks Self-Supporting. Postmaster General Hitchcock is devising distinctive stamps for use on mail originating with the postal savings bank business of the department.

Menace of the Muckraker. Vice President Fairbanks hit the bull's eye in his speech to the ad men when he declared that "The muckraker has become an object of contempt."

PERSONAL NOTES.

"Count that day lost whose low descending son" does not brighten the trails on Sagamore Hill.

Another real daughter of the revolution has died in Chelsea, Pa., aged 90 years.

Example of Dr. Pearson, Distributor of a Fortune. Dr. Daniel K. Pearson announces that his spacious home in Hinsdale for a quarter century is for sale.

Others have given larger fortunes to the public benefit, but we doubt if any other man has given away a fortune so effectively, or had a better time and happier years doing it, than Dr. Pearson.

Loosed from School. Thousands of children loosed from school, scarce know what they can do.

Talks for people who sell things. Mr. Merchant, when you are inclined to think that advertising will not pay you I wish you would consider a moment the number of advertised articles...
