No Clue to the Men Who Killed James Murphy

Police Are in the Dark as to the Identity of Murphy's Assassins.

The assassin of James Murphy, who was mysteriously assassinated near the Looses-Wiles building Saturday evening, July 23, and who died in the Omaha General hospital Monday morning from the injuries he received, have not been apprehended by the police and there is little chance that it will be possible to do so. Detectives Mitchell and Sullivan were detailed on the case Tuesday, immediately following Dr. Edwards' report to the police. They found that the man was in a drunken condition that evening, and that he was of a quarrelsome disposition when intoxicated. A brother whose address has not been found is supposed to be in Chicago.

Detective Sullivan said Wednesday afternoon: "We saw Murphy, before he died and he was unable to give us a description of the men who assassinated him. He even said he could not identify them if he were to see them again. He said that there were two large burly negroes and one white man, and that they attempted to rob him."

We found, however, by investigation, that Murphy, before Saturday evening, had been to his rooming house and, Frank McGinnis, seeing his condition, told him to go out to a drug store and get his wounds dressed. In explaining his trouble to McGinnis he said three white men had set upon him. With these conflicting stories, and no description, it is impossible to run down the guilty parties. No one in the vicinity of Looses-Wiles knew anything of the fight occurring in that place.

The detective department is not of the belief that Murphy's assailants intended robbing him, from the fact that they had plenty of time in which to do it, and his money was found on his person. The body is at the Cole & McKay morgue awaiting the location of his relatives. Copner Crosby, one of the best men in the city in communication with the police, supposed to live in Chicago.
