Pioneer Real Estate Firm to Change Location

Byron Reed Company to Move from the Place it Has Occupied Since 1861.

After forty-nine years of continuous business on South Fourteenth street the Byron Reed company will move. A. L. Reed Tuesday signed a lease for quarters in the Brandeis Theater building, taking the corner store nearest the alley.

The late Byron Reed opened a real estate office in Omaha in the year 1861, his first office being in the rightly named Pioneer block between Eleventh and Twelfth on Farnam. In the year 1862 he occupied the ground where the business has been conducted ever since. A brick building was put up in 1872 and this was remodeled in 1894. A. L. Reed, the head of the company since his father died, entered the business in January, 1897, at which time incorporation took place.

No Omaha business can show so long a record in one place as the company which has just decided to move. The First National bank is probably second, but the Reed Real Estate agency was established on South Fourteenth street two years before the First National bank opened its doors in 1862.

The removal westward will probably puzzle some Douglas county farmers who have been coming to the agency for many years and some of whom feel that a deed is not legal unless signed in this office.

"It makes one feel a little queer to move," said A. L. Reed, "but it had to come. I have seen a good many changes in Omaha myself. I was born in a house at seventeenth and Dodge streets, where the postoffice now stands, and that was almost out in the country."
