White Linen "Middy" Blouse

The loose "middy" blouse is the most comfortable garment the little boy can wear in hot weather. This blouse is made like the ordinary blouse accompanying knicker trousers, except that there is no drawing at the waist line. The jolly contented garment the little boy can wear in hot weather. Boss of the Establishment

BY AMERIE MAN. Here's a dinner invitation for next Saturday to Mr. and Mrs. Brown," announced the wife of the Boss of the Establishment. The Boss looked across the breakfast table at his spouse. "It's up to you," he said airily, "though I must say I don't relish going all the way to Staten Island to dinner."

"St. Louis," urged the arbiter of their social destinies, "the Browns are influential people and they seem to want to be awfully nice to us. It certainly can't do you any harm to associate with them and it might be a help to you some time."

"Oh, yes; Brown's only worth eight millions, grumbled the Boss, "I go ahead and accept it if you only want."

He studied his wife's face thoughtfully for a moment. "Whence this sudden solicitude for my career?" he questioned. "Oh, yes, I understand now—you want to wear your new white dress that when I'll be taking medicine feeling it would be good for you."

"You must be a clairvoyant! How did you ever guess what I was thinking of?" The Boss smiled complacently. "I can read your little mind like an open book," he said and pleased with his own astuteness he became entirely reconciled to the prospective dinner party.

Saturday took him home at 1 o'clock to a meager luncheon of assorted sandwiches and cold tea. "We're invited to an early dinner," his wife explained apologetically, "and the maid wanted to go to her sister's wedding, so I got luncheon myself. I didn't want to spoil our appetite for dinner with a heavy meal in the middle of the day."

The Boss, with just the slightest expression of disappointment, sat resolutely upon the sandwiches. "I thought I told you to tell that girl her sister couldn't get married often than every other week," he remarked. "Get out of woman's sphere!" warned his wife, severely. "Trespassers on woman's rights will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law," she added.

The Boss' capacity for sandwiches was distinctly limited and food tea was by no means first on his list of beloved libations. So his luncheon was not as hearty as usual and when several hours later he found himself on the deck of a municipal ferryboat bound for Staten Island his appetite, he discovered, had an edge that his best razor might have envied.

The Spreading Chestnut Tree

A guest landing at the yacht club float with his host, both of them wearing oilskins and sou'westers to protect them from the drenching rain, inquired: "And who are those gentlemen seated on the veranda, looking so spick and span in their white raching caps and trousers, and keeping the waiters running all the time?"

"They're rooking chair members. They never go outside, and they're waterproof inside."

A family moved from the city to a suburban locality and were told that they should get a watchdog to guard the premises at night. So they bought the largest dog that was for sale in the kennels of a neighboring dog fancier, who was a German. Shortly afterwards the house was entered by burglars, who made a good haul, while the big dog slept. The man went to the dog fancier and told him about it. "Well, vat you need now," said the dog merchant, "is a leadlog to vake up the big dog."

A group of hoboes waiting for the coffee to boil in a tomato can were telling of their hard-luck experiences. "I've had worse luck than anybody," said one of them challengingly, after listening to others' tales of woe. "Once I had to sleep from Wilkesbarre to Perth Amboy on top of a flat car loaded with hard coal."

"And what do you think," he went on, "if every car on the next train that pulled in from the same direction was loaded with soft coal?"

Pietro had drifted down to Florida and was working with a gang at railroad construction. He had been told to beware of rattlesnakes, but assured that they would always give the warning rattle before striking. One hot day he was eating his noon lunch on a pine log when he saw a big rattler coiled a few feet in front of him. He eyed the serpent and began to lift his legs over the log. He had barely got them out of the way when the snake's fangs hit the bark beneath him.

"Son of a gun!" yelled Pietro. "Why you no rings da bell!" The conductor of a western freight train saw a tramp stealing a ride on one of the forward cars. He told a brakeman in the caboose to go up and put the man off at the next stop. When the brakeman approached the tramp, the latter waved a big revolver and told him to keep away. "Did you get rid of him?" the conductor asked the brakeman, when the train was under motion again. "I hadn't the heart," was the reply. "He turned out to be an old school friend of mine."

"I'll take care of him," said the conductor, as he started over the tops of the cars. After the train had made another stop and gone on, the brakeman came into the caboose and said to the conductor: "Well, is he off?" "No; he turned out to be an school friend of mine, too."

A story that has done service in political campaigns to illustrate supposed dilemmas of the opposition will likely be revived in the approaching political "heated term."

There were introductions all around. The big man started in a punchy way at the club guest. "You look like a man I've seen somewhere, Mr. Blinker," he said. "Your face seems familiar. I fancy you have a double. And a funny thing about it is that I remember I formed a strong prejudice against the man who looks like you—although, I'm quite sure, we never met."

Well Known Daughters of Famous Men

MISS LILY YEATS.

This portrait of Miss Lily Yeats is from the pencil of her father, the Irish artist, John Butler Yeats. The entire family are endowed with the artistic temperament, inherited from their father. One son, William Butler Yeats, turns to poetry, and is today regarded as the representative Irish poet, having done much to awaken interest in the other Irish epics, in association with Lady Gregory, Dr. Douglas Hyde and others. Another son, a portrait painter, like his father, a Jack Yeats, is like his father, a portrait painter, while the two daughters, Lily and Elizabeth, devote their energies to the revival of ancient Irish industries and applied arts. White Elizabeth's attentions are devoted to painting, printing and publishing, at the Cuala Press at Dundrum, near Dublin, her sister Lily, with hand loom and busy needle, promotes the Cuala Industries under the same roof. The whole idea of the Cuala Industries is the making of beautiful things—the weaving of tapestry and carpets. Yeats showed us a newly finished vestment in light colors and needle-work of all sorts. If beauty were the sole quality which reflected the utmost credit on designer and maker...

upon which the industries depended, the work would be this have been perforce abandoned. But the fact of having none but the finest of materials, worked by hands trained to the finest point of deftness as foundation for the finished article has brought to the Cuala Industries an enviable and permanent reputation. Some exquisite specimens of weaving and embroidery have come from these industries. One enthusiastic traveler in Ireland speaks of "the wealth of harmonious color, the firmness of texture and the delicate design all border on the wonderful. A set of embroidery banners, some forty in number, designed and worked by these Irish artists, are now in Loughrea cathedral. Cork has also been generous in its support of this particular department. It is to be expected that ecclesiastical work must figure largely in such an industry. Vestments have been ordered and made and draw from their purchasers warm praise.
