'I AM APT TO BREAK BRIC-A-BRAC. We always send each other telegrams like that. Molly Turner used to get sick with curiosity when I would get them while I was staying with her. Aunt Harriet immediately demanded to know what it was and nsisted on seeing it. There was nothing to do but give it to her, especially at Mrs. Dickson looked so suspicious. If I had refused to allow it to be read goodness knows what she would have thought. Aunt looked at it and handed it right over to her, saying she couldn't make head or tail of it. Mrs. Dickson read it aloud:-"The mome raths outgrade lale of view. Tom." don't think she got on to the last part of it, because she was looking at the way it was spelled while she was saying it. Every now and then I would glance over my shoulder, hoping it had been removed, but there it lay, looking so red and conspicuous, I was sure she'd sea it every second. It had brushed the table on its way to the floor, and had left some mayonnaise dressing that really looked awfully untidy, but luckily before Mrs. Dickson caught sight of that, Mr. Chase brushed it all off with his coat sleeve. It really was a nerve-racking dinner for me. They didn't remove that stuffed tomato until dessert. The last time I looked over my shoulder for it and found it had gone it was like a weight removed.
