Owing to delays in the completion of new school buildings in Greater New York there was a siight increase in the number of part-time pupils at the opening of the schools last week. Part-time pupils number 54,000 out of a total registration of 706,600. Eleven school buildings are under construction, containing 200 class rooms. The authorities plan to spend $5,000,000 in buildings and sites the coming year. Despite the efforts made and the vast expenditures, the city is barely able to keep pace in school accommodations with the city's growth in population.
