THE OMAHA SUNDAY BEE.

OMAHA, SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1910.

JUDGMENTS

MAJOR league players are discussing plans for the organization of a player's union or association particularing of the character of a union that will afford them protection ... that they conceive to be aggressive policies of the team owners. Three principal objects are contemplated. First, they propose to obtain a more liberal share of the products of their labor; second, they demand a time limit in years upon their tenure with any one team; third, they demand release from the season's contract at the end of the playing season or twelve months' pay for twelve months' retention; fourth, they demand representation on the national commission. A Mr. Fletcher of Cincinnati is aiding the players in promoting the scheme, but a definite head, so far as the players are concerned, does not seem to be available as yet. Of all the demands the fourth seems to us to be the strongest. The national commission is the supreme court of base ball and nearly all of its deliberations have to do with major league players directly or indirectly, so why should they not have a player on the commission? Each of the other demands seems to have two sides and yet there is room for serious doubt as to the expediency of each. As to the increase of salaries, that is purely a matter of detail. As to the tenure of service, we are loath to believe that it would be best to place a limit upon it. Such action might justly carry with it the counter policy of curtailing salaries, for of course the value of a player to a team and therefore the value of the club's franchise depends in a measure upon the fact that a team owner may retain a player as long as he wishes. Nor do we see any injustice in this to the player. Whenever the time comes that even a star player is seriously discontented with the team he is on, a wise manager will look about for a change, for the discontented player, no matter about his ability, is a drawback to any team. The demand for release from obligation at the end of the playing season is a big question. It seems from one viewpoint that the player certainly ought to have this right, that since he is paid for but six months' work, he should not be subject to rules and restrictions as to his action or movements for longer than six months. On the other hand, it seems only fair that the owner should be protected in his cash investment to the extent of having a voice in saying what his player shall do the six months he is not playing ball for him. This, we believe, the best policy, but we cannot see why, if it is to obtain, the owner should not be willing to make it an object to the player. It is unreasonable to suppose that the player's salary should be doubled, but in all fairness, if he is to be subject to the owner's wishes and the laws of base ball for the six months he is out of the game, then he should receive some compensation for it. That is simple business. Nor will it answer for the manager to assert that he is already paying the player a large salary. Of course he is and, on the other hand, he could not retain the player if he was not. The player is helping him to make large dividends. This contention of the owner seems no more tenable than does the plea of "slavery" by the player. Ball players are no more slaves than men in most any other business, who have to work for their living and no more slaves than the exigencies of the game demand. Players, we understand, do not look for the third major league in 1911, though they wish for it as an outlet to greater freedom and opportunity and in lieu of this they are said to be promoting this players' union proposition, which, in fact, has the support of some union labor men, whether of organizations or not is uncertain. There is room for doubt as to the success of the project as now formulated, however.

The claim is often made that between the caliber of major and minor league pitchers there is little difference. We believe it is a false idea. Time and time again we see heavy hitters go from the minors to the majors and fall completely at the bat. Of course, we understand that nerve and stage fright play a big part, but this uneasiness is not supposed to last long. Corridon, who was whaling the ball in the Western league, goes from Omaha to the St. Louis Browns and scarcely hits at all. In six games week before last he went to bat twenty times without getting a hit. Last week he did little better.

Hans Wagner may be losing his grip on the bat, but if so, he has done enough to give him a fame as one of base ball's greatest batters. For thirteen consecutive years, 1897 to 1909, he maintained an average of better than .347, reaching his highest, .380, in 1908, his lowest, except this year, .320, in 1903. Lajoie for fourteen years, 1896 to 1909, batted on an average of .344 and better, making his highest, .422, in 1901 and his lowest, .289, in 1907. He dropped that once below .300, Wagner never.

Now comes the report that Ty Cobb wants to leave Detroit and would like to play with either New York or Boston Americans. Rumor says Farrell has offered four players for him, including Chase and Ford, his phenomenal pitcher. If Chase is not blacklisted and Ty really is discontented, this might be a good way out of two bad messes. A discontented star does not shine very brightly.

Umpire Johnstone of the National league makes an interesting observation as to the World's series when he says there is a question as to the ability of the Athletic catchers to keep the Cubs from running bases freely. Ira Thomas, Livingstone and Lapp are nowhere when it comes to men like Kling and Archer, and right here is a dangerously weak spot for the Mackmen in comparison with the Cubs.

Pat Ragan, Omaha's former star pitcher, has done famous work for Rochester in the Eastern league this year and is slated for faster company once more. He probably will stick if he goes up again, for he has now had the rounding-out experience that he lacked before.

It was tough luck for Omaha to drop those three games at Sioux City—each one by one run. The first two should have been won easily by the Rourkes, which, of course, is saying all the more for Sioux City.

By next season George Graham ought to be himself again. He has displayed a commendable nerve and shown those who predicted he would never don another uniform.

We wish nobody bad luck, but if Riggert should fail to stick on the New York payroll and revert to Omaha, we would cheer.

We can scarcely wait for the opening of the 1911 season, to see that new Omaha pennant winner.

Rhodes continues to be a rocky way for Sioux City.

Cadman continues to be the team's pinch hitter.

WESTERN LEAGUE AVERAGES

Rourkes Miss Corridon in Keeping Up Stolen Base Record.

RHODES IS STILL WINNING

Holds Second Position in the List of Winning Pitchers—Kane Leads the Rourkes in Stolen Bases —Fenlon Leads Hitters.

Omaha now has two men batting above the .300 mark, Riggert with .308 and King with .305. The team batting of Omaha puts it fifth in the list of teams, the position the Rourkes hold in the league race. Omaha is also fifth in team fielding.

Omaha is second in sacrifice hits and has moved down to fourth place in stolen bases, the loss of Corridon being felt during the last two weeks. Kane now leads the Omaha team in stolen bases. Rhodes is still second in the list of winning pitchers, being excelled only by O'Toole of Sioux City.

Marquette to Travel in West for Big Games

Wisconsin Team Will Have Notable Tour, with Games Against Denver and Creighton.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Sept. 24.—The Marquette university foot ball team is making elaborate preparations for the first extensive tour ever taken by the new university, when it will go to Denver for a game against the Denver university eleven, and to Omaha to meet Creighton university, the strongest team in the west, and will play two other games during the trip. This is the longest tour ever taken by any Wisconsin foot ball eleven, with the exception of the trip several years ago of Wisconsin to meet Yale.

The Marquette eleven will leave Milwaukee October 12 for its trip to Denver, where it plays October 15. This game will be the first heavy game on the Marquette schedule, although there will be a game in Milwaukee against Monmouth of Illinois, October 8.

On the return from Denver the Marquette eleven will stop at St. Marys, Kan., to play the eleven representing that college. Considerable interest is taken in Milwaukee in this contest, as President McCabe of Marquette came to Milwaukee from the presidency of St. Marys and Prof. S. Nicholas, head of the Marquette athletic department, is a former faculty athletic supervisor at both St. Marys and St. Louis universities, in fact, it is Prof. Nicholas who is largely responsible for the manner in which universities all over the country have started athletic sports on a scale never before attempted by Jesuit institutions. His success in athletics at St. Marys took him to St. Louis, where his work with St. Louis university proved such a means of advertising the school through the medium of foot ball prowess and other athletic sports, that Jesuit schools all over the United States are now pushing their athletic departments to the front.

After the game at St. Marys, which will be a midweek contest, the Marquette eleven will go to Omaha to meet Creighton university. Later in the season Marquette will meet Loyola university of Chicago in Milwaukee.
