OFFICERS WANT TOM KIRBY

General Demand by Sheriffs for Man of This Name.

NOT MCCLELLAND BANK BANDIT

Officers from Clay Center, Kan., Make Trip Here, But Say He is Not the One They So Much Desire.

Kirby, the bank robber, was arraigned before Justice Gardner yesterday on the charge of attempting to rob the McClelland bank. Although willing to enter a plea of guilty he was not permitted to do so, being required only to waive examination and be held to the grand jury. He again declared that he had no intention of making any defense to the charge when arraigned in the district court but several local attorneys say they believe the man can get off with a light sentence on a plea of insanity, or some abnormal degree of stupidity.

Before his arraignment Kirby submitted to a surgical operation for the removal of the bullet from his arm. It was performed in the county jail by Dr. Hanchett, who found the slug located just beneath the skin near the shoulder. The bullet was not battered at all, and had not touched the bone, thus substantiating the story of young Julius that he shot the would-be robber while from a crouching position while the latter was bending over him pointing two revolvers at him. The bullet was a .38 caliber, showing that it did not come from the automatic gun used by the boy, but from the cheap weapon which was also kept on a shelf underneath the bank counter.

Press reports of the incidents have caused many inquiries to be made of Sheriff McCaffrey for a full description of the bandit, together with the information that a man by the name of "Tom" Kirby is wanted in various places for several kinds of crimes, including murder. Sunday noon Sheriff Kincaid of Clay Center, Kan., arrived in the city for the purpose of looking at Kirby, whom he believed was the man wanted there for murder and jail breaking, after he had been captured by a sheriff's posse at the end of a fight in which he was shot in the neck, right arm, right knee and left shoulder. Sheriff Kincaid said the Council Bluffs Kirby was near enough like the desperado wanted in Kansas to be his twin brother, but that he was not clearly the man, for he bore none of the bullet wounds with which they had marked their man.

A "Tom" Kirby is also wanted at Fairbury, Neb., and the sheriff there has been writing here for fuller descriptions of the bank robber. The nature of the charges there against the man is not disclosed, but it is said to be "serious." Sheriff Kincaid said also that he was not the man wanted at Fairbury. As a coincidence Kirby says he lived in both Kansas and Nebraska.

Kirby's wife and several of his children called upon him at the county jail Sunday afternoon.

Eight Alleged Crooks Caught

Judge Crawford Sentences Each Pick-pocket Suspect to Thirty Days in Jail.

Eight alleged pickpockets, two of whom are said to have tried to rob Captain Dunn on the street several days ago, were each sentenced Monday morning to thirty days in the jail. Among the number are some of the worst pickpockets in the country, and a tougher looking set of light-fingered gentry would be hard to find anywhere. They came here from all parts of the country expecting to find rich "pickings" during the Ak-Sar-Ben, according to the police, but were forestalled. O'Keefe, who gave his name as Ed Williams, is a man known to the police of a dozen cities, and has as many names as he has fingers and toes.

BIG CROWDS WATCH COOKER

Men as Well as Women at The Bee Demonstration.

MISS PHELPS SHOWS METHOD

Traditions in Cooking Go by Board—Men See Exhibit, Then Telephone Wives to Come Down and Have a Look.

An average of fifty persons crowded Miss Phelps at the Omaha Gas company office at all hours of day Tuesday, enthusiastically learning how to discard age-old traditions in cooking. Meantime three factories were working just as fast as Miss Phelps, not talking, but manufacturing "Triple Trick" cookers for her to talk with.

The Bee demonstration, which is being conducted by Miss Phelps, has caused a furor among housewives and their husbands in the city during the several days it has been going on. The demonstrator announced Tuesday she had observed a remarkable thing in relation to the interest shown. "The men are taking a hand in the investigating of my cooker," she said. "Of course, I wouldn't for the world bring up the inference that Omaha men are dissatisfied with the food their wives have been preparing, but I only know that a big part of my audience here is made up of men. They stand around for a few minutes, ask questions, examine sample cookers for themselves and then go to a telephone and call up their wives. I think their idea is to help their wives out of purely unselfish generosity."

On Cost of Living.
"The cost of living and its enormous increase has, in its state-wide agitation, attracted the public's attention almost as the view points of its cosmopolitan exponents. The reason, if any simple reason exists, has, thus far, eluded the wisest and most profound economic thinkers. But that the increase has occurred and that 'the end is not yet,' is the consensus of opinion confined to no class, but testified to by all, more especially those directly concerned in the purchase of food stuffs. Meat foods in particular, have so soared in price, that except as occasional luxuries, the average family is deprived of the daily use of them. In view of the fact that a mixed diet has been proven by generations of followers to be the best for all-around nourishment and physical well being, this state of things 'ought not to be so.'

One fact universally recognized is that the methods of cooking meats most generally employed by the average housewife are, in themselves woefully wasteful, both in bulk and nutritive values. So much so that many state agricultural colleges have conducted extensive experiments along the different methods in vogue, with a view to discovering if possible a better way. The consensus of scientific reports lies in favor of broiling meats as the method most nearly approaching actual roasting, as formerly practiced before an open fire. It has been truly said that roast beef is a misnomer. Baked meats we have, but roast meats departed the land with the advent of the cook stove. Women almost immediately began to deplore the drying incident to all baking which they recognized as taking place in overcooked meats. Recent scientific experiments place the percentage of loss from 15 to 20 per cent. The stove had, however, far too many valuable and convenient features to recommend it, to think of displacing it and going back to the fireplace for cooking purposes. Hence began immediately an effort to overcome if possible, minimize in any event, this deplorable loss of all that goes to make meats most palatable and health giving, viz: their juices and natural flavors. It was immediately discovered that when sufficient heat was applied to meat promptly, and seal in their precious juices, the melting fats smoked and scorched to such an extent that meats were tainted and gray impossible. So to prevent this smoking, ruinous both to the most delicate meat flavors and the comfort of the housewives, water was added. Water stopped the smoke all right, and some original housewife conceived the idea of attempting to stop the drying of the roast, too, by what is known as basting, that is, taking her spoon and throwing frequent intervals the water, the meat juices, which seeped as the fats, over the meat with a spoon. It was a questionable victory, however, resulting as it did in drawing out the meat juices to a far greater degree than before, as is proven by the ease with which soups are made from meats immersed in water and brought to the boiling point. Then, too, the discomfort and weariness of the oft repeated basting. Basting literally means punishing. You know, and it's an open question which party, the cook or the cooked, received the fullest measure. Finally some thrifty housewife turned a pan upside down over her roast (?) (Considering the stupidity of roasting in water!) to make the basting process less arduous.

Woman's Expedient.
Manufacturers of drip pans, ever alert both to being out-dipped or overdone for the good housewife and to increase their ready stock, seized upon this woman's expedient, that of using two pans, which sometimes did not quite fit, and said: "Well!

manufacture double pans that do fit; call them self-basters and meet this demand."

Others conceived the idea of making depressions in the covers so that the condensation of lost juices and water would settle to the lowest point and the more readily taste the meat.

It is a well-known fact that people go on for years—yes, generations trying to overcome a known defect, before they conceive the idea of striking out on a new line of thought or action. So it was with the "roasting" problem.

It was a woman's idea which turned one drip pan over the other to lessen the work of basting and it was a woman who raised and proceeded to practically answer the very simple, plausible question:

"Why not have a roasting pan which can be used without an oven, without water, right on top of the stove and do away both with heating the oven for roasting and the back-breaking, face-scourching, hand-turning, practice attendant upon the use of ovens for roasting meats?"

The gas company seconding the endeavors of gas stove manufacturers have done more than any other agency to teach people the superiority of broiled meats, by saving in bulk, sweetness and flavor.

They even went so far as to try to induce women to broil-roast their heavy meats in the broiling oven.

The principle is all right, but its working out in the gas broiler reminds one of the story of the small boy whose teacher was quizzing a less bright pupil in the vain effort to secure a certain answer. Finally in despair she recognized the frantically waving hand of theurchin and said: "Well, Willie, what is it?" "Teacher," called Willie, "I know what you're drivin' at, but them questions won't fetch it!"

The results of the broiling principle are what all intelligent cooks desire to secure but the broiling oven "won't fetch it."

The advantage of the Triple-trick in overcoming all these difficulties, are being demonstrated now at the office of the Omaha Gas company.

"It Beats All."
This is quoted from a letter of M. Stockwell, Hannibal, Mo.: "I recently used Foley's Honey and Tar for the first time. To say I am pleased does not half express my feelings. It beats all the remedies I ever used. I contracted a bad cold and was threatened with pneumonia. The first doses gave great relief and one bottle completely cured me." Contains no opiates.
