RAILWAY MAGNATES HERE

Big Stockholders of Harriman Lines on a Trip.

IMPRESSED WITH THE WEST

Think, However, that More Roads Are Needed and that the West Must Provide the Money to Do It.

Nine millionaires and directors of the Union Pacific railroad passed a short visit in Omaha Friday while their special car was being switched for the journey eastward. The capitalists were returning from a lengthy trip over the Union Pacific lines in the west and were on their way to Chicago.

Following were those who composed the party: Otto H. Kahn, member of the Kuhn-Loeb company; L. F. Lore, president of the Delaware & Hudson railroad; Alvin W. Peck, president of the Mercantile Trust company; Frank B. Keech, Eugene Kahn, Martin Erdman, William Whitehouse, Henry R. Winthrop and Dr. Joseph Frankel.

"If what is called the insurgent or progressive spirit continues in the United States it will undoubtedly retard the growth of this country and especially of the west," stated Otto Kahn, a director of the Union Pacific railroad and several Harriman lines and a member of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the New York brokers.

"This will affect the railroads and their growth mostly, but the growth of the railroads is essential to the development of the west. The danger comes in the eliminating of the small investor in money circles. He is the man who builds railroads and finances all the great new projects that go to make a country rich and prosperous and as long as he is uncertain as to what will become of his money after he has invested it, as railroad investors are at present, he will keep his money in other things. But his money in other things such as eastern projects will not help the west.

"I have not the slightest doubt personally that ultimately the proposition of the government and corporations will work itself out finally to the satisfaction of everyone. In fact, I think every day that there are more small investors in large corporations and if no other way this will finally settle it.

"Eastern men all consider the west and all propositions in the west good investments and are sending more money out here every year."

Easterners Ask Odd Questions About Alfalfa

C. T. Oliver Reports that Pittsburg People Are Woefully Ignorant of West.

Easterners Ask Odd Questions About Alfalfa

People living in the east are so woefully ignorant of the west that most of them don't know what alfalfa is, according to C. T. Oliver of Klamath Falls, Ore., who arrived in the city Thursday. Mr. Oliver had just returned from a visit at the land products show at Pittsburg, Pa.

"I had a little exhibit of western alfalfa at the show," said Mr. Oliver, "and this is what those Pittsburghers asked me about it: 'Do cows eat that stuff? Is it good for horses?' Can you make hay out of it?" "Yes, if I hadn't been there on business I would have had some fun. I could have told those people we thatched our roofs with alfalfa, and they would have believed me. As it was, I told them the truth, and that, together with the true story of the alfalfa and potatoes and wheat that grows out in the west, is getting those easterners in a frame of mind that will make them westerners."

The Oregon man declares there will be a bigger emigration of people from the east to the west in the next year than that which took place during the gold fever of '49. He added that the Pittsburgh show did not have nearly enough literature about Kansas and Nebraska to supply the demand that was made.

More than a few voters spent as much as fifteen minutes studying split tickets, voting something that it appears cannot be mastered easily. Attempting to vote suppositional split tickets voters would become confused and would appeal to the instructors two, three and even four times for assistance. Some went away, saying that they would return for further instruction before election day.

The machines used for instruction were labeled with printed labels, just as they will be used next Tuesday. The machines appeared to be mechanically perfect and it appeared that if a voter is thoroughly versed in the workings of the machine he will have no difficulty in registering his preference for candidates.

E. E. E. Ridgway, custodian of the voting machines, said that even now voters should secure instruction. He said unless there is much instruction before election day the business of voting will proceed slowly.

MANY LEARN TO SPLIT TICKET

Instructors Are Kept Busy Teaching the Trick.

MACHINES ARE BEING DELIVERED

Custodians Say They Will Be Ready in Time for the Election Next Tuesday—Three Are Used for Practice.

Voting machine students clustered around instruction machines in the county building basement and the main corridor of the city hall Friday indicated that "split" or "scratched" ballots will be freely cast at the election next Tuesday if the voters succeed in mastering the intricacies of the machines. Similar indications were given in South Omaha, where a third instruction machine has been set up.

It is estimated that 500 voters studied the machines Friday. Many more hundreds are expected to secure instruction Saturday and Monday. While the voters around the machines Friday were not extraordinarily numerous at any one time, they came steadily, and there was hardly a portion of the day that eight or more voters were not "learning how to vote." Few of the seekers of instruction evinced intention of voting straight tickets. Voting a straight ticket on the machine is a simple matter. The voter simply enters the machine, pulls the party lever at the left and then throws the overhead lever that records the vote. Most of the inquirers wanted to know how tickets can be "split" on legislative, senatorial and congressional candidates.
