Senator Burkett Spends Day Speaking in Magic City.

URGES SUPPORT FOR LIVE PARTY

Gives Illustrations of What Republic Means Have Done to Make More Prosperous the Industries of Packing Town.

"Vote the right ticket and get in line with the party that is doing things" was the advice last night to the voters of South Omaha in particular, and the people of the state in general, by Senator Burkett, who addressed a meeting which crowded to the doors the republican headquarters in the packing house city.

Mayor Trainor presided over the big gathering, which listened with intense interest to the senator as he contrasted the records of the democratic and republican parties. He traced the history of the republican party from its inception and said that through all its career it had been identified with virile, effective and aggressive legislative acts, acts that helped the people to live better and do better. The theme of his hour and a half speech was the fundamental difference between the two great parties of the country and he contended that the axiom of the republican party that the federal government was bound to interest itself in everything that concerned the welfare of the people, whether it was in the production of new seed or in seeing that they were supplied with good and wholesome food, was inseparably connected with the prosperity of the nation.

Inspection of Meats. As an illustration the speaker alluded to the inspection and marking of the meat of the packing houses. That policy, he said, was opposed by the democratic party because, as was contended by some of the foremost advocates of the party, it was a duty of the respective states, and, furthermore, it was a matter between the consumer and the producer. "But what the republican party," with Theodore Roosevelt at its head, satisfied with any such theory as that "No, and in three months after the law was passed that insisted upon the marking as well as inspection of the markets of Germany, France and England, that were closed to the packing house products of this country, were thrown open and have been open ever since."

As another illustration, Mr. Burkett alluded to the postal savings bank bill, which, he said, was opposed in the senate by every democratic senator but one, and he reiterated for the reason of the fundamental difference in the ideas of government of the two parties. Incidentally, he mentioned that he had submitted to the senate the first postal savings bank bill, but he added: "I don't claim credit for that. I was simply giving expression to the feelings of the people." At the time he was discussing the point that after all legislation was simply giving effect to what the people strongly required.

Effective Government. "If you believe," exclaimed the senator, "in me as a member of a party that believes in a government being a virile, active force in the affairs of the nation, a government that can do things to help mankind, I ask your votes on election day, but if you think, as the history of the democratic party shows it does think, that the federal government should be a mere police force you can vote for my opponent. It is up to you people to decide."

In its theory of government the democratic party might be right, said the senator, but the people of the country knew that the republican party was mighty in getting results. In concluding the speaker alluded to what the republican party had done on the question of the conservation of the natural resources of the country and referring to what Colonel Roosevelt had done to establish that policy in the enactments of the country, he broached the subject of the house when he emphasized the part the senator was now playing for progressive republicanism in the state of New York.

Panorama Speaks. Arthur C. Pancoast, candidate for state senator who followed, referred to the work of the last state legislature, which was Democratic, and asked why if they were proud of their achievements, their local representatives had slunk home by the alleys and byways of the city.

"I ask this straight question," said the speaker, "if the democratic legislators in the state legislature are proud of their record why do not they come out before us and tell us what laws they have passed for our benefit?"

Speaking on the question of county option Mr. Pancoast said he was opposed to it, and declared, that, in his opinion, the legislature was a satisfactory solution of the liquor difficulty. He advocated protracting the same as in other states for workmen employed on structural steel works and high buildings, such as the provision of nettings and expressed his opposition to the open primary law, which he said should be repealed.

Giving a boost to Judge Sutton he thought South Omaha men should take advantage of the present opportunity for returning one of themselves to congress.

Afternoon Speeches. In the afternoon Senator Burkett addressed an audience of over 200 at the Stock Yards exchange, and showed what the republican party had done in dealing with such matters as the prevention of cholera among hogs and the importation of seeds as illustrations of his argument that the party believed in government being an active and virile force in the affairs of the people of the country. He instanced the satisfactory results to the export trade of the country of the meat inspection and marking law, and contrasted the benefit such legislation had conferred on the packer, the commission man and the farmer, as against the policy of doing nothing, leave it to the states, of the democratic party.

John L. Kennedy Speaks. Senator Burkett was introduced by ex-Congressman John L. Kennedy, who spoke of the importance of the live stock interest being properly represented in Washington, and before bringing Senator Burkett before his audience said a word in favor of Judge Sutton's claims for representative in congress. "You ought," he said, "have representatives who will be efficient in both houses. You have for the first time in the history of your city an opportunity to be represented in the house of representatives by one of your own citizens. Are you going to take advantage of it?"

"Should you fall now in electing Judge Sutton you may not soon again have any like opportunity. We in Omaha shall do what we can, but it is up to you to give your fellow-townsmen such a majority as will show them that you appreciate his services to the country and this community in the past."

Speaking of Senator Burkett, he said that the state had not a more efficient representative in the senate. "There is no man," he said, "in the state of Nebraska today, I don't care the party he belongs to, who can be elected to the senate, who can render as efficient service to this state as Senator Burkett." nedly alluded to the interests of the stock yards, and Senator Burkett, in opening his speech, mentioned that the newspapers named the senator as the next chairman of the agricultural and forestry committee, which committee, he said, handled everything relating to the great industry that was represented by the stock yards of South Omaha.

Senator Burkett and others were subsequently the guests of President Buckingham and the Union Stock Yards company at luncheon.

NEW PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Fifteenth Congregation of that Denomination Organized and Will Build in Omaha.

The fifteenth Presbyterian church in the city of Omaha and vicinity has been organized and will be known as the Fairview Presbyterian church. The building will be built somewhere on Fortieth or Fortieth-first streets, in the territory east of the Deaf Institute and south of Ames avenue. The project of having a church here has been up for some time and lately the Rev. Michael McMillin was made the head of a committee and organized the new parish, helped by Rev. Julius Schwarz and Robert Dempster.

Twenty members have gathered for services and it is expected that the growth of the congregation will be fast. The elders of the church are J. H. Barry, W. R. Sylvester, J. H. Barry and R. Manning and the trustees are the last three of the elders named. Mr. Hughes, a student in the pastor of the new church until further arrangements are made.

Colorado Fruit Land

And especially is this true of the Beaver Park irrigation district— READ THIS

GEORGE R. BRICKENRIDGE From a two and one-half acre orchard sold $500.00 worth of apples first year bearing; second year, $750.00; third year, $1,100.00. Made from small fruit and vegetables. Marketing and cultivation did not require over two hours a day. The past season demonstrated beyond a doubt that anything in the vegetable line will do splendidly, but apples are recognized as being the most profitable crop.

Advantages and Terms— The climate in this section is without parallel, the irrigation system is installed and in working order, and there are fine roads extending all through our tract.

The company has built a railroad, so that Denver, Colorado Springs, Pueblo and various other large cities furnish the best home markets obtainable.

This land may be secured on the easiest of terms. Beaver Land and Irrigation Co. (Pueblo, Colo.)
