ANKLETS LATEST IN LONDON

Handsome Ornaments for the Swagger Women Shown in Shops.

SHORT DRESSES THE REASON

Queen Mary Effectually Kills Hobble Skirt in England—International Exchange of Children Being Boosted.

BY LADY MARY MANWING.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—(Special to The Bee.)—Of the making of strange fashions there is no end. The hobble skirt seemed to be the limit, but now the West End is taking to the anklet as a means of personal adornment. Very handsome anklets are now offered for sale at some of the swaggiest shops. The anklet idea is the outcome of the present fashion of very short dresses, high-heeled patent leather shoes and brightly colored stockings, which in itself is bad enough without the addition of a hobble to further attract attention. The "fashion," it goes without saying, comes from Paris, where it has been taken up to an extent, but only by those inclined to eccentricity in dress.

But after all the wearing of anklets would be merely the revival of an old fashion. Three generations ago it was not unusual to see a hangle round the ankle, and a famous wearer of this ornament was the wife of the third duke of Cleveland, the old duchess who died in 1703 at the age of 81. She had very small feet, and to display them, would often slip on a hangle and let her anklet fall down at her feet.

Queen Mary Knocks Hobble.

Speaking of the freak fashion, it is gratifying to know that the hobble skirt is going to the founding in England, society, due to the action of Queen Mary. A short time ago the queen expressed her disfavor of this form of dress in very strong terms, and it is noteworthy that none of the royal ladies now about the court wear hangle anklets.

Queen Mary's firm will and sober sense of what is right goes farther than the advising of her husband on state matters. In household matters her chief care is economy. She has carried into effect her plan of retrenchment in the private expenditures of the royal family that have been both the respect and admiration of her subjects. She sets an example by her own simplicity as regards the royal household that it would be well for officials of the court to follow.

In using her personal influence to advantage Queen Mary is but following an example set by the late Queen Victoria. Therein lay the secret of that ruler's power. The example of Queen Victoria looked to the life of her people.

Queen Mary is punctilious and careful in all money matters. She is a shrewd judge of men, but careful in the expression of her opinion. She has yet to make an indiscreet comment on any affair of importance. It is thought by many that she carries this reticence forward. King George is generous to a point of considerable personal inconvenience.

The king and queen are on strong terms of peculiarly close affection.

Partly because of King Edward's strong personality, partly owing to his own dislike to push himself forward, King George, when prince of Wales was little in the public eye. Even now he would be in public life no more than he could help if it were not for his wife's urging. Queen Mary realizes what is expected of her husband more than the king himself.

Queen Mary is intensely patriotic. She will wear no clothes made outside of Great Britain.

Her forceful character is one of the greatest assets that King George has—Washington Post.

suit her, and she utterly declines to follow the whim of fashion. For instance, neither queen has ever been seen in the horrible headgear that so many women are adopting at the present time, and they still remain devoted to the touque. This lead is now being very generally followed by the real heads of society.

Exchange of Children.

Amongst the many good works undertaken by a certain band of great women throughout Europe, is one that is known as "The International Exchange of Children."

This was originally founded some eight years ago by the Dowager Duchess of Devon and numerous other great women of the Pauloung St. Germain in Paris. The society deals chiefly with children of the upper classes, and has for its object the promotion, not merely the acquaintance of foreign languages, but likewise the creation of a better understanding among foreign nations. The exchange provides for a three months' residence of a full year between children in families living as far apart as Germany, France, Italy, Austria and England. The idea of the system, which works remarkably well, is that in each country the child of the journey of their children, but that from the moment of the youngsters' arrival until the hour of departure the children are treated absolutely as members of the family with which they are living.

Already several thousand of these exchanges have successfully taken place, and committees of prominent women have been formed in various countries of the continent in Germany, Spain, Belgium, Holland, Scandinavia, Russia and Austria, who undertake the details connected with the practical working of the scheme. While this helps to promote the mutual understanding between foreign nations, and does much to destroy racial prejudices based upon ignorance, it is altogether a very practical effort to contribute to the maintenance of the peace of the world.

Monarch's Yacht is Gorgeous.

The royal yacht Victoria and Albert which King George dispatched to Gibraltar to bring King Manuel in England must not be confused with Queen Victoria's Victoria at Albert. That vessel was broken up in 1887, after a career of fifty years. The present Victoria and Albert was built in

DO IT EARLY, NOW THE WORD

Christmas Shoppers Already on Job—Others Urged.

PROSPECT IS FOR BIG SALES

Majority of Purchasers Are Out-of-Town Persons—Local People Buying All Right, but Not Buying Christmas Presents.

Some will wait until the day before Christmas in spite of all the hortatory remarks which may be addressed to them. Some are already at it. Between the early and the dilatory shoppers there is all the difference between energy, foresight and decision on the one hand, and lethargy and indecision on the other.

Do it early!

Christmas gift purchasers are even now present in numbers in Omaha's retail shops and stores, and though in the big department stores the majority of Christmas presents are out-of-town people, in a few other shops Omahans have been coming to the front. Not that many local people are not to be found in the department stores. They are, but they are buying ordinary things and not presents.

Do it early!

Everything points to the biggest holiday sales local stores have ever known and tremendous stocks have been laid in to anticipate the fall. Formal openings by the big stores will not come until about the 1st of December, but it is betraying no confidence to say that if a shopper will go now and make his selections he will be able to carry off the desired articles if he or she has the money or the credit to settle for these.

Rush Season Close.

Do it early!

The reason is clear at hand when shop girls must work extra hours a day, when postal and express clerks and hundreds of others must suffer the strain of the holiday rush, when because of selfish people's delay the last week before Christmas becomes a time of soul and body-aching, when the best of goods and best of prices are being hoarded away.

KEEP THE OLD LOVE TOKENS

One of the Means of Sweetening the Tempests and Troubles of Life.

Most everything is being sacrificed nowadays to the spirit of practicality. Old love letters are destroyed because desk room is needed. The spreading of the word for decades the turn of the road is marked from to give room to a modern electric sign that tells the same story. The belief's first pair of shoes, worn faint and soft as they are, are thrown in the trash bin that there may be room in the top drawer for the powder box.

All of this destruction of "old time" sentiment and the best of reminiscence is checked full of wrong. The most interesting place in or near Washington City is Mount Vernon. The most ancient stately square in Philadelphia is Independence Hall. The most valuable spot in Texas is the old village at San Antonio. Such places as these contain the story of American history, and the citizen who views and thinks while viewing—and no one can view without thinking—becomes instantly a patriot; likewise, a better husband and a better father.

Keep the old love tokens. Don't destroy the "old gray bonnets." Treasure the little shoes. Save youth's love letters. And we may not have as much room, but we will have more sweetness, and there will be more heart in the world.

POWER BEHIND THE THRONE

Queen Mary of England an Active Force in the Affairs of the Empire.

When King George V ascended the throne of Great Britain following the death of his father, King Edward VII, there was much doleful shaking of heads. George will never make the king his father did. He will never rule as did his firm, just grandmother, Victoria. He is weak. He is not prepared for the responsibility. These statements and many others of like nature were made concerning the prince before he was proclaimed head of England's destinies, since his accession to the throne there has been a cessation of this criticism. The wife dominates more by the new ruler, and he has been forced into silence all his official life. His choice in naming diplomatic officers or his judgment in settling difficult ministerial questions has thus far been all that has excited the most exacting of his subjects could desire.

Some one closely connected with court circles whispered a story the other day, however, that takes issue with the credit of King George's administration away from him. It was said confidentially to some one who had just said some one said it confidentially to some one else, that Britain's real power is in the queen and beautiful wife of the king, Queen Mary. "No decision of any kind is made by the king without first consulting his wife," said the informant.

As news spread and how it is common talk all over the kingdom.

"#800,000,000," it is becoming a byword. This is the answer that invariably follows any question put in the line, these days. It makes no difference whether the question be relative to instructions concerning a shooting-match or the settlement of a political affair.

Queen Mary's firm will and sober sense of what is right goes farther than the advising of her husband on state matters. In household matters her chief care is economy. She has carried into effect her plan of retrenchment in the private expenditures of the royal family that have been both the respect and admiration of her subjects. Mixed Motives.

William Jay Schellfish, vice president of the Men's League for woman suffrage, said at one of his striking suffrage meetings in New York:

"If we studied questions with the cold desire of getting at the truth, then, no doubt, we should all be suffragists. But we can never approach a question, it seems, without taking sides, without becoming partisans, and as partisans, in our hot wish to vanquish the other party, truth becomes a little bit obscured."

"Free mother in the world can be pure that is our great trouble."

Mr. Schellfish smiled and resumed:

"A clerk went bitterly on the beach one stormy day while out on a fishing boat wherein sat his employer. As the clerk watched with wild eyes the little boat, now swayed under a whole force, now surging forward gallantly, now buried again, he clasped his hands and cried in great agony:

"If that boat sinks, I lose my job!"
