There's a dime in it for each of you boys," they proposed to the lads, pretending that the fowls belonged to them, "If you run down our geese for us."

The boys were off with a whoop and presently returned, each lugging a squawking bird, all except one little fellow, to if I changed my mind." whom the goose looked larger than the paid per agreement, and the first act ended with everybody happy, the sister and the salesman all unsuspecting.

A minute or two later Gross came up the street, happy in the virtue of his Christmas gift. At the house the empty crate confronted him. One of the small boys, still lingering about the place where money was so easily earned, told him the story. Gross told it at the police station and Detective Dan Lahey enters.

He found that Mrs. George Zeidell, 3412 Decatur street, had paid 10 cents a pound for the six geese to the peddlers and most certainly claimed them as her property. But it soon was made known that she was a close friend of Mr. Gross' sister, for whom they were originally intended, and that the two families might some day become related through means of matrimony. Then the atmosphere cleared and the tangled skein of the plot unraveled. The goese would all be in the family, anyway.
