

COSTILLA ESTATE TO EXHIBIT

San Luis Valley Project to Be Represented at Land Show.

RICH IN HEALTH AND WEALTH

Colorado Garden Spot's Advantages Set Forth in Graphic Form for Omaha Visitors—Big Irrigation Project.

Products from one of the largest estates in the United States will be displayed at Omaha January 15 to 23, in connection with the display from the San Luis valley of Colorado at The Bee land show.

The Costilla estate, now controlled by the Costilla Irrigated Land company of Denver, was given a grant from the Mexican government nearly seventy years ago.

This estate remained an undivided unit until secured by a syndicate of capitalists and now an irrigation system is under way, by which 100,000 acres will be placed under cultivation.

The exhibit of the San Luis valley will occupy a large section on the stage at the land show and all the commercial clubs from this famous section have united in sending exhibits to be used in this display.

F. W. Wiley, the general manager of the Costilla company, says: "We will make this exhibit at Omaha just to show the people of the Missouri river territory what has been done by others who have moved to the San Luis valley."

The irrigation projects in this valley are ones where there is no question as to water rights and where settlers will not have to worry over the problem of too much land in the spring and too little in the summer.

A part of the irrigation plant which is being put in on the Costilla estate includes the great intake tower which is to be steel and concrete and 135 feet high.

The San Luis valley is crossed diagonally from northwest to southeast by the Rio Grande del Norte, the same stream which 1,000 miles to the south forms the boundary between Texas and Old Mexico.

From the mountains to the westward the Alamosa, La Jara and San Antonio rivers flow into the Rio Grande. From the east the Culebra, Trinchera and Costilla creeks and their tributaries flow a large amount of water.

The southern end of the valley is a closed basin, with a chain of lakes at the lowest point. Many streams come from the Sangre de Cristo and Cochetopa ranges. While the land in the valley level lies, it all has a slope which enables irrigating canals to be built at low expense.

The San Luis valley was once a great fresh water lake, extending more than 100 miles north and south and forty miles east and west, walled in on every side by mountain ranges, except for a narrow gorge through which the water cut its way toward the south.

Because of the peculiar nature of its formation, laid in the San Luis valley differs in appearance from that which people from the east are accustomed to. As the rivers filled the old lake up with soil and other materials the larger stones and pebbles and the heaviest, richest soils were deposited together around the outer edge of the valley.

The peculiar nature of the San Luis valley gives much of the land another great advantage—its sub-irrigation. By sub-irrigation, or "subbing," as it is generally called in the San Luis valley, it means that by surface irrigation the land gradually fills with water so that it is moist to the surface.
