Slocumb's Death is Still a Mystery

New Facts Develop Which Further Complicate the Incidents of His Death.

After the failure of every effort that has een made to establish the identity of C. H. Slocum, the man found dead in a house cive has been put in the hands of Coroner Crosby that may throw some light upon Slocum pawned a watch and some other caluables, being paid $75 on the outfit at the Brodkey pawnshop at Fourteenth and Douglas streets on the afternoon of the day before he met his death. In case he should not come back, as he said, he left the following address: 1129 Fifth avenue.

The information was put in the coroner's hands only this morning. He has telegraphed to the New York address, also to the police in that city, and is in hopes of receiving an answer this afternoon that termined to start at the lowest rung of the noon, in its verdict confessed its inability to determine whether "The death was Young Drexel worked hard on his first caused by his own act or the act of others,

The police have been able to east no light upon the strange case and are as much at ea as is Coroner Crosby.

The inquest brought out the fact that all the gas stove burners and gas jets on the first floor were found wide open. When the police entered the house they found every door and window locked except one, that being the one by which a murderer might escape. Neighbors testified that two men instead of one came to the house in a back Friday morning. Charles Chappell, the hackman who drove Mr. Slocum to the house, states, positively that he took only Mr. Slocum to the house arriving there shortly before noon.
