THE following excerpts are from a lecture delivered by the master critic of The Bee at the Young Women's Christian association last week. This was the second of the eight-lecture course, and was entitled "Musicians as Men; the Every-day Side of the Great Masters: Their Wit, Wisdom and Philosophy."

It was through the Violinello that the way was opened for the appearance of Christoph Willibald Gluck in the pages of story. His beautiful playing brought him into the good graces of the princely Lobkowitz family. And Gluck was essentially the musician of singing and stringed instruments.

Handel once said of Gluck's early work that he knew no more composer than his (Handel's) cook. It is true. Handel's cook was quite a fair bass singer, and later critics have decided that Countersopra was not one of Gluck's strong points. It is interesting to note that this knight, this chevalier, appeared as a performer on musical notes or in fact, with a violin, painted by orchestra. So we must be careful about looking down upon the achievements of some of our vaudeville experts who do stunts or things like that, for who knows that perchance there may be a Gluck in the making. In connection with Gluck we find mention of the "Pastorale" which was a form of rather formless style of composition which has never flourished since the days of Gluck. The Pastorale was a species of Lyric Drama composed of songs, duets, etc., selected from various operas and strung together to make a whole. In no notable case there were no less than twelve songs, dances, etc. A kind of a high-class medley in the form of an opera as it were. The name of Pastorale is one can infer, meant a pasty, or pie. (But whether this pie was opened it was "a dainty dish to set before a king" or not the type has gone out of existence.)

Gluck gave much time to the study of aesthetics and of the language and literature of the various countries. He was certainly patriotic in his tastes and pursuits; he had princes and royalty of various kinds and degrees to sing his music. One of his works was played by four orchestras, the architect playing the accompaniment. It is, of course, well known that Marie Antoinette studied singing with him. Marie Antoinette later assisted him nobly by her powerful protection when the opposition to him and his new ideas was so strong in France, especially among those who wanted him kept out of the academy. The same old story.

Gluck's new ideas were the precursors of the Wagnerian Music Drama. He made the overture mean something—made it suggestive of the action of the drama; he prepared the audience for the action of the piece, and serve as a kind of argument to it (Gluck). Instead of being a potpourri of the opera or a piece of instrumental glory to prepare for the rising of the curtain. He made the Music actually subservient to, or perhaps more accurately, complementary to the action of the drama; he finished the solos and arias without the customary repeats; introduced choruses that had a meaning and a reason for existence and never sacrificed the dramatic situation for the exploitation of his own voice as a composer or to give a singer a chance to show off remarkable virtuosity. What a remarkable forecast of the musical schema of Richard Wagner. And he it is noted that this was merely the reappearance of the ideas of Peri in 1600.

Peri in 1600. Gluck in 1774. Wagner in our own time. The three great reformers. But the man who introduced in the study of opera has many beautiful by-ways that it is not always easy to keep to the study of the Musicians as Men.

The critics and the antagonists were Piano an Aid to Better Vocal Music

Singing Voice May Come Through Means of Knowledge of the Great Instrument.

That the larger number of persons who can play the piano in Europe is responsible for Europe's amazing crop of opera singers sounds at first very paradoxical; should a pianist's name stand back of this statement, the skeptically inclined would detect in it a desperate effort to promote the piano teacher's profession. But the man who introduced in this apparent paradox is by his own confession a very mediocre pianist, although very prominent in other fields of musical endeavor. He is no less an authority than Alfred Gaudard, for thirty years a singer at the Paris opera, the creator of Mephistopheles in Gounod's Faust, professor of operatic expression at the Paris conservatoire, and at present head of the operatic school at the famous New York Institute of Musical Art.

"There was a time," he said, "when I believed, as many Americans do, that there was some racial disability or maybe climatic influences which would doom America forever to reach across the ocean for filling the casts of operas presented here. It was all nonsense! I accepted a call to this country as an expatriate without much enthusiasm, and I shall come back next year with a good deal of enthusiasm, for I have found among my students wonderful voices, and I know there must be somewhere in the United States many more wonderful voices which will be silent forever. But alas, three-quarters of these budding songsters are terribly handicapped by the fact that they never studied piano playing. They lack facility in reading, they lack the rhythmic, they lack the knowledge of tonality which European boys and girls acquire very young, at an age when it would be futile or detrimental to sing. I am amazed at the indifference girls, and especially boys, manifest toward instrumental music. The American boy who can play an accompaniment is almost ashamed of the accomplishment. The result is that young men and women who perhaps have voices worth cultivating do not discover that fact at all until it is too late, after their voices have become hoarse from singing ridiculous popular songs, or howling in the college chorus or otherwise. Almost every proficient pupil of mine has been brought up in a musical environment, and could, if not render difficult piano pieces, at least read any score."

"The others sing, in many cases, have saved their time and their money and my patience. Imagine the trying position in which a singing teacher is placed when a young woman applies for tuition who has naturally a good voice, but has to be taught the notes of a tune as a parrot is taught to memorize words, one at a time. Lack of solid musical foundation makes

MOVE AGAINST THE SCALPERS

Funkhouser Says if Comptroller Does Not Act the Council Will.

VOLUME OF BUSINESS IMMENSE

Is Said to Be Even Greater at the Court House Than at the City Hall—Treasurer Furry Blocks the Game.

Unless City Comptroller Fred Cosgrove issues an order to his employees prohibiting them from handling assignments of warrants on a resolution to this effect will be introduced into the city council. Councilman Funkhouser declared Saturday morning he would introduce the resolution if Cosgrove refused and he would give the members of the council a chance to go on record as to whether they favored the plan for an employer whose duty it is to protect loan sharks in the practice of loaning money to city employees at exorbitant rates of interest.

The business has reached such a volume that more than one-half the time of Clerk Crickmore is required to attend to the details of the assignments, such as filing them and then protecting the warrants when they come through. Comptroller Cosgrove stated Saturday morning that he would introduce the resolution if Cosgrove refused and he would give the members of the council a chance to go on record as to whether they favored the plan for an employer whose duty it is to protect loan sharks in the practice of loaning money to city employees at exorbitant rates of interest.

"When I get my office in shape, I will take up this matter along with others which have come to my notice," said Comptroller Cosgrove. "But for the present, I will not do anything other than to make a statement that the practice will be taken care of in this office."

"Will you issue an order for the office force to quit handling these assignments at the present time? You admit the practice prevails," Cosgrove was asked.

"Not at the present time," replied the comptroller. "I will take some action later."

"They say there is no solution for the evil," said Councilman Funkhouser. "The solution is so simple that I am surprised that it has never been done. All the comptroller would have to do would be to issue an order prohibiting his department from the handling of these assignments. If he does not do this on his own initiative, I will put it up to the council in the form of a resolution. If the city fathers want to sanction the maintaining of a department for the aid of the loan sharks at the expense of the people they can do it. But it will never be done with my vote."

"The practice has grown to such an extent that the different departments cannot be trusted to handle them by themselves who infect the city hall. It has not been so very long ago that Treasurer Furry literally kicked one loan shark out of his office, for insisting that Furry give the time of his employees to further the sharks in their business."

"But once the sharks find that they are not going to get the full protection of the city, they will quit the business. They won't take the chances if they know they have no protection, other than their own efforts."

Furry Solves Problem. Treasurer Furry has solved the problem as far as his office is concerned. For a long time he was pestered with sharks, who wanted the information as to whether people who assigned warrants were in arrears for taxes.

These fellows came in the office with jury lists and inquired as to the standing of jurors, even before they had been assigned as jurors," stated Mr. Furry. "But I soon put a stop to this business by refusing any aid."

"Loan sharks should be put out of business instantly. The sooner it is done, the better the city and its employees will be. There are two ways in which they could be eliminated. The comptroller or the council can issue an order that the assignment must not be handled, or department heads can refuse to employ us to keep employees who pay toll to the loan shark."

"You have no idea the amount of business these fellows do," said Mr. Furry, producing records to substantiate his statement. These records showed that one firm had collected warrants amounting to $2,191.81 this month. These warrants came through in three batches.

*Operate at Court House, Too. The sharks who operate in the city hall also operate in the court house, where assignments are filed and protected by the county clerk. The business in the county building is said to exceed that of the city hall by many thousands of dollars. A distinctive feature of the business is that so far the school warrants have not been scalped, though the board pays by the month as does the city.

Former Comptroller Lubek says the practice could be stopped by the city maintaining a fund to pay warrants as soon as they are issued and to have orders, especially for day laborers, O. K.'d each day. At present the day laborers are paid by the week. Brokers charge them 2 per cent for money, so the victims pay 12 per cent a month, the same principal working all the time. "Other cities have solved the problem, so why can't the city of Omaha," says Treasurer Furry. "In Chicago, St. Louis and other metropolitan cities loan sharks are not allowed to hold in the buildings Omaha citizens should make a statement that the practice will be taken care of in this office."

PRIZE LOVE BALLAD

Quaint Song Competition Which Converted Thorns Into Roses. An enterprising and wealthy Chicagoan, Carl Lorenz, in some connection with the idea that a clever American song writer should perhaps change thorns into roses, announced his prize struggle the other day and offered a substantial reward to the man who could take a set of lyrics by Arthur J. Lamb, the Chicago writer, and set them to silver music. As soon as the offer was exploited about a million or less manuscripts were received from every portion of the globe. Then Lorenz, who is a really good business man, but very little of a musician, had to hire a half dozen music judges to sift out the available contributions and keep the disappointed contestants from doing him bodily harm. When all was amicably adjusted, the composite elements of the song were gathered thus:

Secretly had the song become dry from the press when an aviator of singers flung into the lottery interested to sing. Two scores of renown, St. Thomas Quigley and Edward Dorr, L. D., among the song simultaneous in Chicago and New York with stereoscopic views. Now our fair city of Omaha will shortly be invaded with the city.
