

Ivan and Murphy, accompanied by a squad of reporters, comprised the posse. Several men and newspaper men joined in the chase, but were unable to catch them.

The bloodhounds hurried east on Dodge until they reached Fifteenth street, where they cut diagonally across the street to the south side and pulled their trainer around the corner of Fourteenth street and started south.

The first thrill of the pursuit came when the dogs rushed from the Fourteenth street side of the Auditorium directly to the door of August Minardi's pool hall, 718 South Fourteenth street.

They went to go in here," Noffsinger called to the posse, which gathered in a close semicircle about the door. Sergeant Madsen and the detectives opened the door and the dogs bounded in, sniffing men who were gathered about the pool tables.

The dogs retraced their steps out of the door. The men in the pool hall were searched, but no weapons of any kind were found on them. They were left unmolested.

Chase Comes to End. A little shanty a quarter of a mile south of LaPlatte, standing a few feet back from the tracks, was approached by the hounds.

The dogs went to the door and sniffed vigorously a second and then turned away toward an engine which tank fifty feet farther on. The hounds smelled about the tank and followed the scent to a pile of ties close by.

Assassins Fire on Victim. Herman H. Cohn, vice president of the Nebraska Clothing company, and one of Omaha's pioneers, was shot and almost instantly killed, not thirty yards from his own doorsteps, by one of two masked men at 1230 S. O'Connell Sunday morning.

Trail Leads to Cottage. The trail led down into a deep ravine in front of a cottage. The rain was pouring down. It was pitch dark. Flash lights were used as carefully as possible in order to follow the hounds and keep them from peckets to be carried in their bearers' hands.

But the expected did not happen. The dogs ascended a hill in a southeasterly direction, leading their followers beneath branched trees and through brambles. They stopped beneath a tree under which was a pile of dead leaves.
