Her Husband's Voice On Woman's Lack of Dignity as Affecting the Servant Problem.

Rarely had the Amateur Wife spent such a tragic, awful day! Never had she felt so unhappy, so discouraged, so humiliated...

HE LOOKED THEM OVER WITH A CRITICAL EYE.

The Post Graduate Husband had listened to this plaintive explanation with a constrained smile. "It all comes from the feminine lack of system," he announced.

The Amateur Wife smiled a fiendish smile. "You will be perfectly lovely of you!" she said brightly—and forthwith gave him specific directions for reaching the dinky back office...

The unbarbered youth waited the Post Graduate Husband to a rear room and there a bustling, bowery and officious little woman, a representative of the inflexible Madame Celeste, took him in charge.

"How many rugs and how often must they be taken up and beaten?" "How many children and how long have you been married?" "How far is it to the nearest Presbyterian church?"

It was also strange to him that the hovering agent always announced that the last person she brought in was "the very best girl on our books."

And at the end of the meal even the Post Graduate Husband felt spoiled. "She'll be all right after she's had a few lessons," he said humbly.
