The average number of passengers carried by each ship on a trip was seven; the largest number carried on any one trip was thirty-two. (This was accomplished by the Deutschland I, traveling from Dusseldorf to Munster, Osnabruck and return, a distance of 169 miles). The various passenger airships made 448 regular journeys in the priod specified. Each trip covered from fifty to 125 miles. These journeys were chiefly tourists' excursions, starting from cities like Munich Dusseldorf or Baden-Baden.
