RISING POWER IN MEXICO

Career of Francisco I. Madero, Leader of the Insurrectos.

COLLEGE LIFE IN UNITED STATES

Home Life of the Family, Public Activities and Characteristics—Wealthy in Banks, Lands, Cattle and Rubber.

Francisco I. Madero, Jr., the leader of the Mexican Insurrectos, was born forty-two years ago in his father's large hacienda, near the well known town of Parras, in the state of Coahuila, about twenty kilometers from Saltillo, the capital of the state. He is about five feet and a half tall, is heavy set, has large, prominent, dark brown eyes. His countenance is frank and pleasant and shows the highest marks of intelligence, education and culture.

While Francisco I. Madero, Jr., has the reputation in his home town, Parras, and elsewhere in the state, especially in the capital, Saltillo, where he is well known, of having been healthy, bright, good natured, though somewhat quick tempered when a boy, no one seems to remember that he then displayed an particular talent for leadership or for any profession or other occupation.

He received his education in a preparatory school and the State University of Saltillo, Coahuila, and in the capital of the republic, where he finished his law studies. He also attended school in San Antonio, Tex., New York and in California, being a student in the agricultural department of the University of California in 1883.

His studies of the codes, especially of the Digests of the great Juarez, upon which the republican codes of Mexico had made their mind of the student to compare those laws with the administration of them and to his astonishment he discovered that the "law" in his dear Mexico was not either in the spirit or the letter of what the republican codes of Juarez had made them, but were, to use his own idiom, "La ley es lo que manda a Diaz," or the law is what Diaz says. So he left his desk and books and consecrated himself to the cause of the revolutionists of his own state some two years ago, when his life-long friend, Lic. Miguel Cardenas, governor of Coahuila, on being re-elected, was not permitted to take his seat.

Home Life of the Maderos.
The home life of the Maderos is strictly Catholic; in fact, it is Catholic in every sense of the word "Catholic"—generous in thought and action, kind, considerate and loyal to the family circle, to their people, to their countrymen and to their country. They are of the Roman Catholic religious faith, but their creed is not dogmatic and their faith is not blind. On the other hand, the principles of the "universal brotherhood of man" have been instilled into the sons of many generations and which all have made a part of their life.

The Maderos are of the highest standing in the community where they live. They have always been among the foremost leaders in every progressive movement and the open advocates of justice.

The grandfather of Francisco I. Madero, Sr., was a Spanish grangee who came to the country that Cortez had added to the realm of his majesty Don Carlos V., then king of Spain, when the descendants of the Aztec and Toltec and the innumerable tribes of Indians of whose origin we know but little, if anything, were still carrying the yoke of Spanish cruelty. He was a man of wealth, position and education, so in a family befitting him he established his family on a large estate in a fertile valley then famous for its vineyards, near the center of which was a flourishing pueblo, Parras, a typical Aztec-Spanish-Mexican Indian town. And there the father, grandfather and the Insurrecto Madero all were born and there is still one of the homes of the large family.

Many of the Coahuilans who have gained fame are of Aztec origin, being descended from Don Ventura de la Paz, grandson of Xicotencatl, the main chief of the Tlascaltecos, who under one Cortez, a missionary, in 1520, was one of the heads of seventy families which then settled in the present state of Coahuila; others are purely native Indian blood, there being many tribes in the state, each having its own strictly different dialect and customs, while still others, to which is now added the present famous name of Madero, disclaim a drop of any blood but pure Mexican runs through their veins, the blue blood of the Coahuila kind.

The word "Coahuila" is of the Nahuatl Indian dialect and means "frying snake." The word has always been a symbol of liberty for the tribe from which the name of the state is taken. Its members dominated that part of northern Mexico for many centuries and were noted for their love of justice. It was this tribe which joined the Spanish missionaries and helped to put down the murderous tribes which attempted to exterminate the vanguards of Christian civilization.

For What the State is Famous.
Coahuila is famous for its rich and extensive silver and copper mines, its many fertile valleys, its vast tracts of majestic forests, its variety of climate, its many rivers, its springs of highly mineralized water, both hot and cold; for its large number of excellent public educational institutions, for its largest percentage of population which can both read and write in the republic, and for being a cultured, progressive, patriotic people.

The capital of Francisco I. Madero's name is full of monuments to the achievements of Francisco I. Madero, the state house is a beautiful little plaza, known as "La Plaza de la Independencia"; in another part of the city is still another small park with a fountain, many trees and flowers, which bears the name of "La Plaza de los Hombres Ilustres." A large statue of the hero of Pueblo Zaragoza, a son of Coahuila, stands as a guard to the great Alameda of the city, facing Calle de Victoria, named in honor of the first president of the republic, "Victoria."

"Casa Blanca," a large two-story adobe house, situated on La Calle de la Independencia, one of the principal streets of Saltillo, the capital of the state, is considered a sanctuary by Coahuilans, for it was in this house that the poor priest Hidalgo was in hiding from the mercenary

What the Maderos Own.

There is little that is really good in the state of Coahuila that the Maderos have not owned a large part of or do not at this time own. The quaint Aztec-Spanish, Indian, Mexican town, Parras, situated about half way between Saltillo and Torreon, is practically controlled by the Maderos or was up to the time of the uprising and still is unless they have sold their vast holdings. The street railways, electric light plant, water, much of the town property belongs to them. They own all the principal vineyards, for which the place is renowned, the winery and the ancient wine cellars, made by the native Indians under the direction of Spanish priests in 1530. The cellars with their casks and hogheads made by hand with the use only of the crudest instruments are in daily use today and in a state of perfect preservation.

The value of the vineyards and wine cellars, now equipped in the most modern manner for making various grape wines, is almost inestimable.

Thousands of acres of rich grazing lands on which herds of cattle are fattened each year for the market tend for many miles around the town of Parras and lead off to the mountainous regions, which are covered with valuable timber. Vegetable and small fruit farms are everywhere in evidence on the valley lands owned by the Maderos. From them hundreds of Mexicans live free and easy. The Maderos do not only put their poor brother men and women in a way of doing for themselves by giving them work for which they are paid, but they give them all their food, houses to live in and a percentage of the profits of the crops they help to raise. They likewise own the land, and they own some others of property, and offer them every reasonable assistance to effect that end.

In the Rubber Industry.
One of the most profitable enterprises owned by the Maderos is a big factory for the extraction of rubber from the guayule, the famous scrub rubber tree which grows profusely in the mountainous regions of Coahuila. Extensive areas over which the valuable tree grows are owned by Francisco I. Madero and family. The extraction capacity of this factory is about 20,000 pounds of crude rubber a day, and as the cost of extraction is less than three cents a pound, which is all the expense the Maderos have, as they own the trees, the profit is big, even with guayule as low as 30 cents a pound, which is much less than the writer has ever known it to be quoted. The Madero holdings are not confined to

BLUE AND GRAY TO MEET

Semi-Centennial Celebration of First Battle of the War at Manassas.

George C. Round of the little town of Manassas, Va., wants to receive a postal card from every veteran of the civil war, whether union or confederate, asking for a program of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the first battle of the war, which will take place July 21 next. It is requested that the postal include the name of the writer, his army service and a brief patriotic sentiment. The cards thus received are to be preserved forever in the Carnegie public library as perpetual memorials of an extraordinary event.

Lieutenant Round was a United States signal officer during the war, and he is now one of the leading citizens of the town made famous as the scene of the first battle of Bull Run. Through his energy and that of a committee a celebration has been arranged which has attracted the attention of even the president of the United States, who will address the blue and the gray at his love feast at Manassas if he can leave Washington. Lieutenant Round is a member of Manassas Picket post of Union Veterans; and associated with him are Captain Westwood Hutchinson, adjutant of Ewell camp of confederate veterans; Dr. Herwin U. Hoop, president of Eastern college, and G. Raymond Ratcliffe, president of the Manassas Business League.

The exercises will take place, appropriately, at the junction of Grant and Lee avenues, the two principal streets of the town, under the shade of trees grown during the last twenty-five years. They will include a spectacular representation consisting of forty-eight maidens, each representing a state in the order they were admitted to the union, each clad in the red, white and blue, and bearing the name of the state across her breast. These maidens, singing the national air, will represent the reunited nation, so eloquently typified by the military histories of the men who have arranged this celebration. The Manassas Jubilee colors will be a unique arrangement representing the cordiality which exists between union and confederate veterans. The prevailing design will be red, white and blue of the Star Spangled Banner, but the confederate battle flag will appear here and there, showing that peace and harmony exist between the two. The badges to be worn at the celebration are being worked out on the same principle.

A feature of the celebration will be a new national hymn written by Mrs. Mary Speed Mercer of Elm City, N. C., which, with words expressly arranged, has been adopted by the committee as "the Manassas National Anthem." The public school children of Manassas are now learning the music, which is said to be exceedingly good. The chorus runs as follows:
America! All hail to thee!
Thanks be to God, who made us free,
North, south, east, west, hand clasped in hand,
United, we, thy children, stand.

Grant avenue in Manassas is the finest residence street of that historic town. It was dedicated October 9, 1862, by excursionists from the Grand Army encampment, then in session in Washington. On the corner of Grant and Lee avenues it is projected that some time status of those two eminent generals will be erected.

"The Hebrew nation had a custom of a jubilee once in fifty years," said Lieutenant Round, speaking of the coming celebration. "All debts were cancelled, all old scores wiped out, and there was rejoicing throughout the land. Moses commanded that the trumpet should sound for the Jubilee on the tenth day of the seventh month. As Moses hit on so convenient a day for us we propose to do as he commanded. We will open with a grand spectacular and musical festival on July 10. After that we will have some minor events of interest to those who desire to come and study the battlefields at their leisure. Our full program has not yet been arranged, but will be sent out in a few days to all who apply for it. The great day will of course be the 21st, when President Taft will address the citizens of the reunited republic and shake hands with the blue and the gray. The exercises will take place near Manassas Junction and can be conveniently reached by rail or motor car."—Boston Transcript.

LOVE'S DREAM GETS A JOLT

Hero of Bride's Dreams Revealed in the Pungent Atmosphere of Onions.

Love's young dream got an awful jolt in the Bronx, borough of New York, when Mrs. George W. Weller, a wife of eight days, learned a terrible secret of her young husband's life. Weller is a good-looking chap and his wife is an idealist. She just knew that George possessed a poetic soul and that if he would only apply himself he could become a second Byron.

She sat in their newly furnished flat at 443 East One Hundred and Thirty-ninth street building air castles. The soft spring winds blew gently over the fields in their new dress of cool green, laden with the perfume of budding trees and flowers, but the rumble of the elevated railroad and the clang of trolley cars drowned their music.

It brought thoughts of a moonlight night on some pleasant stream and a canoe sliding through the purling waves with George at the paddle and herself, a Brinkley girl, resting on silken cushions in the bow with her white hand trailing in the warm, caressing water.

George, who had been dressing in an

BOULEVARD AS A MONUMENT

State of Delaware to Have a Two-Million-Dollar Road, 110 Miles Long.

A boulevard 110 miles long, across the state of Delaware, is to be built at a cost of $2,000,000 by T. Coleman du Pont, president of the du Pont Powder company. The right-of-way is to be not less than 100 feet nor more than 200 feet. A state commission will select the right-of-way and supervise the building, and it is to be devoted to the state when completed.

One plan is to have a twelve-foot roadway at each side of the boulevard, with a sidewalk and trees on the outer edge of each roadway, an electric line on the inner side of each roadway and a walk with two rows of trees forming the middle of the boulevard between the two electric trolley lines. But the final form of the highway and the exact route will not be decided until after the survey has been completed and the entire subject has been considered by the commission, which will act in conjunction with General du Pont and his engineers. General du Pont does not think that the boulevard should go directly through any of the principal towns, because it would frequently be subject to the disadvantages of sharp turns and it is probable that in many cases the way would be too constricted for a boulevard.

"I do not think any of us fully realize the benefit good roads will mean to the state," General du Pont said. "It would tend to develop it from one end to the other and bring our farmers nearer the market with their crops, and let people who know little of Delaware come here and see what we have and locate here. The French have enough roads to go around the world fourteen times, kept up by the government, and horses there pull three to five tons on the roads.

"In offering to build this road I want to say that I have no ulterior motive whatever. I wanted to do something for the good of Delaware, and at first I thought of a hospital; then of a school, and finally I thought that good roads would really do more for the state of Delaware than anything else I could do."

This boulevard may well prove to be a most lasting monument to the family whose name has been closely allied with that of Delaware since 1802, when E. I. du Pont de Nemours founded along the Brandywine the powder works that have become the greatest of the kind in existence—Manufacturers' Record.

A Bachelor's Reflections.

No sooner the time for summer vacations comes than it's time to pay for summer vacations.

The great thing in an argument is to let the other fellow do the talking till he disproves himself.

A man can think he can afford champagne in a restaurant but that bottled water is an extravagance at home.

Woman's Happiness

The highest point of woman's happiness is reached only through motherhood, in the clasping of her child within her arms. Yet the mother-to-be is often fearful of nature's ordeal and shrinks from the suffering incident to its consummation. But for nature's ills and discomforts nature provides remedies, and in Mother's Friend is to be found a medicine of great value to every expectant mother. It is an oily emulsion for external application, composed of ingredients which act with beneficial and soothing effect on those portions of the system involved. It is intended to prepare the system for the crisis, and thus relieve, in great part, the suffering through which the mother usually passes. The regular use of Mother's Friend will repay any mother in the comfort it affords before, and the helpful restoration to health and strength it brings about after baby comes. Mother's Friend is for sale at drug stores. Write for our free book for expectant mothers which contains much valuable information, and many suggestions of a helpful nature.
