Wayne Moore Funeral Conducted Privately

Services Delayed for an Hour, Hoping Dead Man's Mother Would Arrive in Time.

The funeral of Wayne Moore, who received fatal injuries in an automobile accident near Waterloo early Tuesday morning, was held Friday morning from his late residence, 768 South Twenty-ninth street. The strictest privacy was observed in the of the family and fellow club members being present.

The active pallbearers were members of the Elks' club, of which Mr. Moore was a They were Dr. F. Daly, Frank Sloan, Robert Bushman, Charles Stand-Edward Creighton and Ralph Sprague. The honorary pallbearers were F. O. McCaffrey and E. F. Leary. There were no religious services and the body was laid at rest in the Connor mausoleum in Holy Sepulcher cemetery, with the simple burial rite of the Elks' fraternity.

To mark the approaches to the bridge it day passed the Bourne resolution, authoriz-ing an investigation of the postal system of the United States and to determine in two quarter circles, flanking each side what changes are necessary in the present of the bridge proper and inclosing a half circular plass. A corresponding architectural feature is to balance it at the opposite end of the bridge. The Fine Arts commission appointed by President Roosevelt favored the erection, as a memorial to Lincoln, of a portico Dorte columns arising form an unbroken stylobate on the axis between the Washington monument and the proposed memorial bridge, the bridge to be, of course, symbolical of the union of the north and south. The portico proposed consisting of columns to feet in height, would occupy a space 250 feet in length and 139 feet in width, approached by flights of stairs on the east and west, abellished with appropriate groups of coulpture and surrounded by a central, crowning group of statuary. At the head of the canal, at the eastern approach to the memorial, it was proposed to place a statue of Lincoln, while surrounding the memorial and framing it linden trees would be planted four rows deep, to form a peristyle of green, from which would radiate various avenues centering upon the memorial itself.

Sentiment is growing in favor of the erection of the memorial bridge. In the event the Lincoln Memorial commission and the Fine Arts commission decide on the erection of the portion of Doric cotumns in addition to the memorial bridge, the Doric columns with which it is now proposed to mark the bridge approaches will be eliminated - New York Tribune.

SPOILING A BORDER ROMANCE Senora Talamantes Written Up "Joan of Are," but She Didn't Joan at All.

We could heartly wish that some war correspondents with a dryasdust regard for facts would refrain from meddling with the work of their more imaginative colleagues. Take the case of Senora Talamantes, for instance. It is beyond all question the one really dramatic incident that has come over the wires from the disturbed Mexican provinces; the rest is not exactly leather and prunells, but it amounts to little more than a commonplace chronicle of alarms and excursions, principally excursions. To tell the plain truth the Mexican war was uncommonly dull until the senora burst upon the scene with her terribly picturesque vengeance for the killing of her husband and sons.

The senora is one of the fifty-seven Joans of Arc belonging to the revolutionists. There appears to be a Joan of Arc in Mexico wherever there is a good live correspondent, but the Senora Talamantes gets more publicity than the other joans because she has the better press agent. To get down to our story, senora is a widow. A certain Colonel Chiapas of the federal army captured her husband and shot him along with their venged and took the field herself at the head of a band of insurrectos recruited or the Talamantes plantations. She trailed Colonel Chiapas over many weary miles, and at last, so the story went, ambushed his force and took him prisoner. The colonel was wounded and deserted by his men upon the field of his defeat. But his life was very precious to the Senora Talamantes. She had a terrible object in pre serving it from the perils of battle. Her order to her men had been. "Do not kill Colonel Chiapas; his life belongs to me! So they only winged the colonel, and as he lay helpless on the bloody sand the senora bent over him and looked into his eyes. Ah, such a look! Neither said a word, but the colonel winced perceptibly. He was a brave man, a valiant soldier of Diaz, this Colonel Chiapaz; but he read his doom in the glittering eyes of the Senora Talamantes, and he winced, as any would to spondent's tale. But why prolong the sunrise the following morning, when the colonel was shot-prisoners are always shot beside a newly dug grave.

Our readers will obserfully admit that this was a most vivid and interesting story. It is altogether too bad that Colonel Chiapas should reappear in the news the very next day, as well as could be expected, and marching merrily along with his men to the relief of some beleaguered garrison. It was a bit inconsiderate of the colonel to come back so soon. Having been killed in the most approved style he should have known enough to have stayed dead until his return would not have at tracted any particular attention-Brooklyn

Woman Now Paying the Penalty for Breaking Into Man's

Domain. Listeni Be calm, madam! It's about your feet! They are growing bigger! Almost as these lines grow! Fact, Several shoe men said so, and they ought to know, if any one does. They didn't mince words about telling it, either. Their explanation is even more horrible than the fact itself. They say it is because women are doing more walking now than they ever did since they were in bondage and had to work in the fields and carry large loads of garden vegetables to market on their heads and return with the money so that their agricultural husbands could invest it in corn and rye. This doesn't mean, according to the shoe n, that the feet of New York women only are growing larger. It applies t women everywhere. So it would appear that at last womankind is now paying the penalty of getting into business just like a man, instead of staying home to teach the baby to say "papa" or dress the table prettily for dinner. She goes out and tramps around the city for the greater part of the day trying to sell something or sits at a desk all day and shuffles her feet about, and in either case her feet are bound to grow larger, not only in length, but in width also, say the shoe men. "Woman's invasion of the commercial
