heavy showers, as in the early hours yesterday.

All Cavalry Uniforms of Empire. Almost exactly at the appointed hour, the colonial and Indian contingents, which were to lead the way over the seven-mile route, formed on Victoria, embankment and proceeded up the Mall, past Buckingham palace to Constitution hill and Hyde park corner. It was a wonderful display of soldiery that preceded the carriages, exhibiting all the cavalry uniforms of the empire.

A contingent of Canadians escorted the first carriage, occupied by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, premier of Canada, and Premier Fisher of Australia. They were followed by other carriages, carrying Premier Morris of Newfoundland, Premier Botha of the Union of South Africa, Premier Ward of New Zealand, the governors and commissioners of smaller colonies, each escorted by troops from their respective colonies.

They were followed by the ever popular troopers, the Northwest mounted police and an African force organized on similar lines.

The colonials, in royal carriages, and wearing uniforms and decorations, came next, and were cheered all along the line.

For picturesque the Indian section, next in line, could not be excelled anywhere in the world. The Indian cavalry, in the most gorgeous silken uniforms and turbans, wearing medals won on the field of battle, preceded the carriages in which were the ruling Indian princes and potentates. The latter were fairly weighed down with jewels of enormous value. Their costumes, including turbans and tunics, were of every hue. They received a hearty reception, at which they were visibly pleased.

Rush to See King. Although enjoying the spectacle, as Londoners always do, the people were out today to see their majesty, and when a salute, fired by a battery in Hyde park, announced that the king and queen had left the palace, there was a rush on the part of those who had not already obtained places to point the telescope, they might get a glimpse of the imperial ones.

The royal procession was made up much as on yesterday, though somewhat longer, as it included many who before were in attendance at Westminster abbey. In advance was a long line of troopers and officers, Indian, colonial and British, all brilliantly uniformed. A drizzling rain fell as the royal carriage drawn by eight cream colored steeds slowly came up Constitution hill, but it did not dampen the enthusiasm of the crowds, who were there to give the sovereigns their first welcome since coronation day.

The king wore a field marshal's uniform with a sash of the Order of the Garter. The queen was dressed in white and wore a blue sash of the Order of the Garter. Her hat was trimmed with ostrich feathers in two shades of blue. From end to end of the long route their majesties received notably spontaneous and loyal welcome.

Following the sovereigns was a carriage containing the duke of Connaught and the duchess, followed by princes, generals and officers of state, including the earl of Granard, the duke of Norfolk and military attaches, among them Major S. L. C. Sloum of the American embassy.

The procession stopped at Waterloo Place to receive an address from the council of Westminster city and at other points to accept addresses from local civic bodies. Winston Spencer Churchill, as home secretary attended these ceremonies, accepting the addresses for the king, the reply to which he was to make.

At Temple Bar there was a more elaborate ceremony. Here the lord mayor of London, afoot, and the sheriffs on horseback, awaited the coming of their majesties and upon their arrival surrendered to the king the city's pearl sword. His majesty simply touched the hilt as a sign of his acceptance, the lord mayor then receiving back the sword, as lord mayors have done for many years. The lord mayor then remounted, and with the sheriffs, joined the procession, continuing with it until it reached the city boundary at London bridge.

As the sovereigns passed through the center of the city millions of lights arranged for illuminations simultaneously were turned on and the great crowd about the royal exchange redoubled their cheers. On the other side of London bridge the king was in one of his many home districts, or, rather, his former home, for here, as the duke of Cornwall, he was the largest ground landlord.

In their address the southern boroughs referred to the improvements which the king had made in the buildings of the estate, which is occupied by the poorer classes. Replying, his majesty paid a tribute to the work done by the borough council to improve the conditions of the people and promised that the duchy would continue to do its share.

All through south London and back again through Westminster Whitehall and the Mall, to Buckingham palace, the crowds lined the stands that lined the route and cheered heartily the appearance of their majesties.

A stirring day closed with an outbreak on the part of the troops and the people in the vicinity of Buckingham palace, similar to the spontaneous demonstration made yesterday when the sovereigns showed themselves on the balcony of the palace upon their return from the coronation ceremony at the abbey.

LETTERS OF WOMAN BACK OF THE DOUBLE KILLING

Trial of Frank Henwood in Denver Develops Basis of Quarrel Which Led to Shooting.

DENVER, Colo., June 23.—The anxiety of Isabella Patterson Springer, wife of John W. Springer, a Denver capitalist, to recover letters written to her by S. L. (Tony) Von Phul, the St. Louis ballplayer, was the primary cause of the fatal shooting May 21 of Von Phul and George E. Copeland of Victor, Colo., by Frank Henwood in the bar of a local hotel.

That is what John T. Bottom, Henwood's attorney, told the jury yesterday in his opening statement in the trial of his client for the murder of Copeland. Several physical encounters preceded the shooting, he said. Von Phul threatening Henwood's life and covering him with a revolver.

The prosecution completed its direct testimony this afternoon, contenting itself with establishing the fact of Copeland's death and the manner in which he lost his life. Cross-examination failed to obtain any evidence that Von Phul was armed at the time he was shot. It was testified, however, that Von Phul was the aggressor and knocked Henwood down.

Overruled in its motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, the defense called George B. Russell, a bartender on duty at the time, who testified that Henwood did not shoot until after he had fallen to the floor.

Strike of Seamen Ends. SOUTHAMPTON, June 23.—The strike of seamen finally ended today when the employees of the White Star line accepted the terms the company had returned to work. The other lines had already compromised with the strikers.

HOPKINS TAKES THE STAND

Senator Defeated by Lorimer Heard Many Rumors of Bribery.

BELIEVES THAT MONEY WAS USED He Says that He Was Not Able to Put His Finger on Any Corruption—Was Regular Republican Nominee.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—Although former Senator Albert J. Hopkins on the day Senator Lorimer was elected to the senate heard many rumors of the use of money in accomplishing that result he said today he was unable to "put his finger" on any corruption. Mr. Hopkins testified before the senate committee investigating the Lorimer election.

Pressed to tell the committee whether he had any reason to believe that any of the republicans who deserted him for Senator Lorimer had done so because of improper influences, the witness declined to answer. "I don't think I ought to say," declared the former senator. "It is only my belief."

Neither could he name any person who could aid the committee, he declared. He added that he had tried to forget his defeat to a seat to which he declared he was entitled, saying that he was sure that the public had no time for a man with a grievance.

Testimony of Mr. Hopkins. Former Senator Hopkins of Illinois, who was defeated for re-election when Senator Lorimer was elected in 1909, was the first witness today before the senate committee which is investigating Senator Lorimer's election. At the outset of his examination by Attorney Healy for the committee, Mr. Hopkins was asked:

"Who were your opponents at the republican primary for United States senator in 1907?"

"William E. Mason and George E. Foss," said Mr. Hopkins.

"How about William G. Webster?"

"Oh, yes. He was also a candidate," said Mr. Hopkins, seemingly a little confused by the question.

After his victory at the senatorial primary, Mr. Hopkins said he was considered the republican party's candidate for senator just as Governor Deneen was regarded as its candidate for governor.

"I was assessed by the State Central committee, just as the other candidates were, to run the campaign at the fall election," said Mr. Hopkins.

The election of senator by the legislature in 1909 was then inquired into. The witness told of the election of a speaker by a combination of "democrats and recalcitrant republicans," and of a republican senatorial caucus in which he was selected as the party's candidate.

Elbridge Haney, counsel for Senator Lorimer, suggested to the witness that the meeting was a "conference" rather than a "caucus." Mr. Hopkins, however, insisted it was a caucus.

In describing what he did at Springfield to further his candidacy Hopkins said he hired a hall in which conferences of his followers were held every night or so. "The main argument we used was that I had been elected at the primaries as the party's candidate, and that every loyal republican member of the legislature should vote for me," said Mr. Hopkins.

Coming down to reports that he had heard about the use of money to defeat him, Mr. Hopkins said his private secretary told him Senator McCormick had informed him that $2,500 had been offered him (McCormick) to vote for Lorimer.

"Did he vote for Lorimer?" the witness was asked.

"Not until after Lorimer had enough votes to elect him."

Mr. Hopkins said that he did not go to see Mr. McCormick because his secretary reported that McCormick was going to remain loyal to him.

Night Before Election. Mr. Hopkins then told of efforts to keep his force in line on the memorable day when Lorimer was elected.

One of the men he went to see on the floor of the house that day was Representative Johnson Lawrence.

"He had always voted for me, and when he told me he was going to vote for Lorimer," said Mr. Hopkins, "I told him if he did he would not be able to convince his people he had not been purchased. He said he would vote for Lorimer, but did not admit he was purchased."

Mr. Hopkins said he heard that two other members he was going to lose were Logan and Durfee. Both of them had been at his room at 11 o'clock the night before the election, the witness explained. "And we ate apples and smoked my cigars," Mr. Hopkins added.

"Where did they go after they left your room?"

"My friends told me they went to Senator Lorimer's room."

The witness said that when he asked Logan why he was going to change Logan responded that he had not been elected and that Lorimer was going to be elected, and that he was going to vote for him.

country who were said to have been on the so-called blacklist.

The indictments were returned after six weeks of investigation by a special grand jury impaneled by United States District Judge K. M. Landis. The inquiry was conducted by Assistant Attorney General Clark McCrecher, aided by United States District Attorney Edwin W. Sims. The investigation also was under the personal direction of the attorney general and former Assistant Attorney General J. A. Kenyon. The indictments were prepared by O. E. Pugin, government indictment expert.

Practically the same point was involved in the Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' association. Government attorneys declare, however, the western associations represent greater power and greater territory.

The indictments contained no reference to repeated charges of combinations among the manufacturers, but it was declared today a further investigation may include that part of the case under E. Pugin's direction of the attorney general and former Assistant Attorney General J. A. Kenyon. The indictments were prepared by O. E. Pugin, government indictment expert.

The government also is paying marked attention to the case under proceedings now being conducted by the attorney general of Missouri and has had a representative present at all its hearings.

Many Rumors of Corruption. Mr. Hopkins said he knew of "no man who could put his finger" on corrupt means in the election of Mr. Lorimer, but he added that rumors of the use of money were "in the air the day Lorimer was elected." He heard talk of Lorimer's possible election two or three weeks before the election.

"I felt Lorimer was trying to defeat me and my understanding was that he would use any instrument to defeat me," said Mr. Hopkins.

"Even to being elected himself," suggested Senator Kenyon.

"I thought he was the last man who could do it," responded the witness.

Mr. Hopkins denied that he or his friends, as far as he knew, had ever talked about buying democratic votes in the senatorial fight. He denied specifically that Dan-
