BROKE UP FINE FUNERAL

When big events happened in Gunnison. One morning, when the west was young, important ceremonies were held in Gunnison. Bishop Spaulding had arrived from Denver to dedicate the new Episcopal cathedral. Court was in session in the mountain hamlet and all the leading lights of the bar were in the town.
 Sheriff Jack Bowman had left several days previous to the chapel dedication to locate a band of horse thieves who were ruthlessly raiding the country. On the day of the dedication exercises a horseman clattered down the mountain and dashed maddly up to the home of Mrs. Bowman.
 "Sheriff Jack has been killed by the horse thieves," he gasped, flinging himself from his panning horse and wiping the tears which ran down his tanned and sun-browned cheeks.
 "Are you sure? Where did it happen? How do you know? Tell me all about it!" cried the distracted wife, gazing frantically at the panting mountaineer who had brought the tidings.
 "Can't tell the details. They sent me on to break the news quietly to you. He was killed last night by the horse thieves, that's all they told me. They came to my house this morning," he gasped.
 The morning of the funeral ceremonies

The Talk of the Town

would a bunch of 'simps;' and when you have a mob of roughnecks to interest and lure inside, talk to them in their own persiflage."
 Omar, who lays no claim to having written "The Rubaiyat," exclaimed that a rife, like the "Great Divide" or "The Glaciers," or a spectacle like "Creation," had no ballyhoo. Such shows have merely a grind, that is, a constant talker. He called attention to the fact that all shows calling for a ballyhoo had three steps before the entrance. The reason for this is that the boosters, or shillabars, in the crowd may be seen going into the show by those behind, and thus encourage, as it were, a forward impetus toward the ticket seller—New York Sun.
 What She Sang.
 The stout prima donna waddled forward, smiling in every dimple.
 "You see my kind," she said, "I sang for you, see song of your land, 'Ome, Sweet Ome!'"
 Thereupon, having warmed up, she emitted something that sounded like a composite adaptation of "Here Comes the Sun," "The Last Rose of Summer," "Two Gallies and a Steam Train," "Retiring and Tremulous and Long-continued Applause"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.
