Like Joshua Flint, University Student Prefers Hobo Life

Fred Ross, Crack Athlete, Passes Through Omaha from Michigan to Seattle.

A husky appearing youth, dressed like a tramp and acting like a gentleman, arrived in Omaha this morning on the bumpers. He was Fred Ross, member of the track team of the University of Michigan, and one of the best sprinters in the west. Omaha was a temporary resting place on a hobo trip which he is taking across the continent bound for Seattle from Ann Arbor.

When school was out last week instead of going to his home in New Jersey he left Ann Arbor in company with the son of Prof. Andrew McLaughlin of the University of Chicago and the two boys beat their way through to Chicago. Since then Ross has traveled alone. He has been beaten by railroad detectives and in Council Bluffs succeeded in throwing off two tramps who had been sticking close to him for several days trying to get a chance at the money they knew he was carrying.

He carried his money sewed into a dilapidated, ragged necktie, thinking that no better place of concealment could be found. Preparing for what he thought would be cold nights, beating it across the plains of Nebraska on top of freight cars, he had his heavy winter clothes sent to him and discarded his light summer garb. As a result Omaha appeared to be rather inhospitable with its torrid heat.

His job is waiting for him in Seattle and at the end of the summer he expects to go back again to the university.
