> In the olden times putting the light and heavy shots and tossing the caber were kindred contests on almost all the Scottish programs in America. Usually it was the plan when the caber tossing was over, or even before it was disposed of, to use the caber to mark the front line for the shot putting, for in those early days there was no circle to put from, only two lines or two cabers seven feet six inches apart being the run allowed. The caber being good and heavy and about eight inches in diameter. it made a splendid stop board for the com petitor and he could fling himself against cess. In doing so he has reversed the it with all his force. Being of a circular shape, he could slide his toe underneath it and if he was inclined to topple over the front line it never failed to hold him back. Consequently some wonderful records were credited to some of the early Caledonians. In the record books of thirty years ago or thereabout the mark for putting the six; teen-pound shot was given as fifty-two feed ten inches, and it was said that some o the unofficial performances were much

With the advent of amateur competition the caber in front was eschewed, but it was modified and a small cleat about a foot in length marked the front part of the seven-foot run. It was often a straight doubt been evolved after serious study and piece of wood, but as shot putting became more popular the cleat became longer, until today it is governed by a well defined rule and forms an important part of the shot putting paraphernalia. Only in America is this cleat tolerated, and there was some funny gossip in the old world before the Olympic games of 1908 when it was reported that the weight men here wanted a special rule to allow the use of the cicat. The Englishmen could not understand the use of a big block of wood in front of handles a wooden putter with wonderful the putter at all, and the common understanding about it was that the Americans He has most delicate fingers, and the close wanted a wall built in front during the observer will learn much from his dainty shot putting to keep them from toppling prominent amateur has a more ungainly over. Ralph Rose, who won the contest, did not put within three feet of his record. There are a long string of similar intances showing that the cleat is an artificial aid to the shot putter.
