The wheat, while not a big crop, is turning out better than was anticipated, and the yield the primary manne with the office for the writing in of names. The attorney general's office several years ago decided that names written on a primary ballot should not be canvassed or counted. Later the legislature amended the law so as to provide blank spaces for the writing in of names of candidates. The last legislature amended the law by leaving out this provision, so the law provides, however, that the primary ballot is almost if not quite as large as last year.
