Although smoking has gained but scant popularity among Omaha women, there are a few-principally those who have traveled much abroad and who have brought their newly-acquired continental habits back with them-who enjoy an occasional cigarette. This is not surprising, but that the practice has inspired the small girls with interest, has given at least one mother food for thought.

No one in the family is greatly surprised when the youngest son evinces a desire to mimid his father and take a smoke. The usual bribes for keeping sonny from smoking until he is of age are begun to postpone the evil day. But when the youngest daughter voices a similar desire to imitate mother, the affair takes on a different color.

Recently an Omaha woman who thinks nothing of smoking a cigarette now and then-a woman distinguished by the personal care which she gives to the education of her small daughters-was given a sudden jolt by her 6-year-old daughter, who came to her with a request for a silver box for cigarettes like mother's.

The astonished matron, who is nothing if not quick-witted, put her small daughter off with these words: "You are too young now. Wait until you are eighteen."

In honor of three visiting Thetas, numer ous entertainments are being given by the local members of this sorority.
