day, and according to Father Gannon all there is to it is "Catholic's believing firmly, as they do, that their religion is the only true one, cannot in conscience participate in what is to them false worship of God.'

Jesus Christ laid down no such narrow doctrine and no argument is needed in support of this statement of fact.

If a Protestant democrat feels that he could welcome our president, a Unitarian republican, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian association, why cannot a liberal Catholic do likewise? Granting Father Gannon's belief to be correct, then, of course, there must be separation of Catholic and Protostanta on the other side.

This must be true or else, more plainly stated, all non-Catholics are denied the right to eternal life unless they embrace the "only true religion."

In the light of the scriptures I cannot inderstand how any liberal mind can take as correct such a version of divine teachings.

As a liberal Protestant, if I am to interit eternal life, should 1 or can I deny to any other of God's children this same right?
