Furnishing the Home

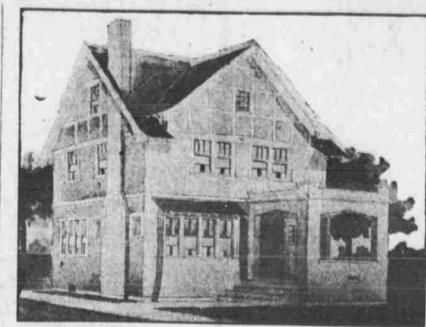

has not been customary to look to the architect for suggestions on interior furnish ing and decoration. So few people, however, engage the services of an experienced decorator and house furnisher, thinking themselves fully competent to handle this part of the work, that a few obervations from the writer from a pracand artistic standpoint might be of assistance to those who at this time of the year are furnishing the new home which has been under construction during the summer When none of the furniture is bought new, for the new home, the old furniture being considered good enough, it is then more difficult to have the furniture in harmony with the home, for old furniture, which has been accumulated for years, is often of a miscellaneous sort. things, with due allowance for necessary exceptions.

When bookeases are being purchased, it should be seen that they are of proper dimensions to fit the wall space intender for them. Instead of purchasing book cases it is better to have them built in.

Many women, especially, those inclined toward the picturesque, admire and call for little casement windows. Casemen windows are small windows with the sill high from the floor, and hinged at one side, swinging either outward or inward. While they certainly look very nice, is appropriate places, this fact must be borne in mind, that it is very difficult to curtain them with good effect. In England, where they have no mosquitoes and few other winged insects, the casement windows awing outward, and there are no screens. In most parts of this country t is necessary to swing them inward, that screens can be provided on the outside. There are, of course, ways of handling the windows if awung outward, by a little lever below the all, so that even in this country they could swing outward and have a screen on the inside, but when the window is closed, the screen on the inside does not look well. They look out of place. When the casement windows swing inward, if the curtains were fartened upon them, they would be in the way, and if they were placed on the window sash, they would not look well, and when the windows were standing open the curtains would not look wall on the

If these and many other little things were borne in mind while the home is being planned, the house when finished would be in perfect harmony throughout and would always satisfy.

Think 'Em Over.

Experience may be the best teacher, but only the siready wise seem able to learn from her.

There are some women who are so reticent that you can't even get anything out of them by squeezing them.
