CURRENCY REFORMERS TALK

Local Financiers Appear Before Taft Monetary Commission.

ALL AGREE ON REFORM PLAN
However, There is Diversity of Opinion as to How Directors of Reserve Association Shall Be Named.

All the Omaha business men on the stand before President Taft's national monetary commission at the home yesterday morning expressed themselves in favor of the Aldrich-Vreeland plan of currency reform, with its National Reserve association. They were Luther Drake, T. C. Byrne, Frank L. Haller, J. E. Baum, H. R. Gould, former Senator J. H. Millard, N. B. Updike and J. A. Sunderland.

Senator G. M. Hitchcock was invited to take the stand, but declined, saying he was so prejudiced against the plan that he would not make a good witness. Judge Walter I. Smith of Council Bluffs also declined to be questioned, saying it was more important that the commission should get the opinions of the business men.

T. C. Byrne and J. A. Sunderland, while agreeing in the main with the provisions of the plan, objected to the proposed appointment by the president of members of the board of directors of the National Reserve association. All the directors, they said, should be elected by the association, except the controller of the currency, who should be a director ex-officio. Even if a president should not regard party in making appointments, he would be accused of doing so and this would work to the detriment of the plan, they thought.

Robert M. Bonyngs of the commission assured them that the commission was still undecided as to whether it would be best for the president to appoint.

Choosing the Directors.
Aside from the matter of the method of choosing directors, none of the witnesses had any suggestions to offer toward the improvement of the plan. F. L. Haller and N. B. Updike said they trusted the bankers with their money and they would also trust them to work out the scheme for a better financial system.

"We are willing to put our financial affairs in the hands of specialists," said Mr. Haller. "When Senator Aldrich appeared before the Commercial club to talk on currency reform, there was a distinct prejudice against him, but he shed his horns successfully in his address to us. His report was the most exhaustive and his plan the best that has ever been presented to us."

"In this matter I cannot imagine a conspiracy among bankers against their customers. I don't fear any banking trust, because the anti-trust laws are being enforced in a way to warn the bankers to keep out of trouble."

"When a commission as competent as this has thoroughly threshed out the matter, the business men generally will accept their verdict."

Mr. Byrne appeared particularly incensed by Wall street methods. He said there would have been no panic in 1907 if the national banking laws had been enforced in New York in that year. He was reminded that the first "run" was on the Knickerbocker Trust company, a state institution.

H. R. Gould of the United States National bank favored including state banks in the National Reserve association. He also favored the appointment of directors by the president, declaring that he couldn't imagine a president small enough to make the appointment a political matter.

Hitchcock is Aggrieved.
Senator Hitchcock was aggrieved because Henry W. Yates, president of the Nebraska National bank, a known opponent of the plan, was not a witness, and announced to Secretary Wickham his intention of bringing Mr. Yates before the commission this afternoon. Mr. Wickham said the meetings were open to all and no special invitations were sent out.

It developed during the hearing that Omaha banks issued $1,000,000 in cashier's checks and $1,000,000 in clearing house certificates during the panic of 1907. All were secured by commercial paper and the banks lost not a dollar. All the checks and certificates were returned to the banks and destroyed except about $500 worth, which were held out as souvenirs.

President Millard of the Omaha National bank said all of his cashier's checks were returned except one, which was kept by Vice President William Wallace as a souvenir.

E. B. Vreeland and R. M. Bonyngs are the only members of the commission left on the job, the others having become ill or worn out. The commission has held hearings in northern, western and Pacific coast cities and has Kansas City and St. Louis to visit on its present trip.

The Omaha city club entertained Messrs. Vreeland, Bonyngs and Secretary Wickham at luncheon.

BONELESS MAN SENDS THRILLS THROUGH BARBER

Otto Meyer, leading man in the tonorial parlors in The Bee building, is seriously considering the production of a new play, which could be appropriately called, "The Boneless Man and the Barber." Mr. Meyer gets the hunch from an incident that happened a few days ago. He was making smooth and clean the face of a pleasant man who had climbed into his chair with easy agility and settled himself with snakelike sinuosity. After Otto had shaved the man beyond a suspicion of hirsute attachment and before he could shift the chair from the reclining position, the customer flopped his face around onto the headrest, leaving the back of his neck exposed, and murmured, "Neck shave, please."

When Otto caught his breath, he ejaculated, "Well, I'll stand for anything once, but flip-flops in this barber chair will be barred hereafter." And when he arose to leave the boneless man was as stiff as a preacher at a funeral.
