

Desperate Desmond High Art Is Put to Practical Purpose by a Wandering Sculptor By Hershfield

A camel race on the desert: The accidental Desmond urges his mount after the camel on which Claude and Rosamond are fleeing to escape him. Even with its double burden the swift camel which Claude has selected is fast outdistancing the villain's. As they draw away from Desmond, Claude and Rosamond notice a strange figure driving a wagon through the desert. It is none other than Europe's most famous sand sculptor, who is in search of the finest Sahara sand. But what can a peaceful artist do to aid a hero against a villain?

Art is a wonderful thing. As some one has said, art is long and life is short. Consequently we never know all that there is to be known about art. Now a sculptor on the desert might appear remarkably useless to us, but watch what this one does for the lovers. Dearly, as any sculptor at Atlantic City, this man takes the desert sand and rapidly creates an Italian camel corps, guns and all. This is true art, as it gives the desired impression at a glance, and a small wonder that Claude and Rosamond rejoice in the skill of their friend.

When Desmond sees the sand camels in the distance, he is dumfounded but not dismayed, and though he takes them for a regular battery, he resolves to charge them, for, at all costs, he is resolved to capture Rosamond and put her heroic lover, Claude, to torture. Naturally this pleases our hero, as he, Rosamond and the sand sculptor look on with the liveliest interest. Claude knows that when Desmond and his pals hit the imitation camels they will be half smothered in sand. For the result, see to-morrow's pages.
