BIG PRIZES TO BE REWON

Golden Opportunities for Bachelors of the Right Class.

WIDOWS WITH GREAT WEALTH

Some Fortunes Beyond the Reach of Modern Knights—Others From Gallants to Show Their Talent.

If some altogether desirable man should come along, guaranteed heart whole and fancy free, with no previous attachments against his affections that might interfere with a new one, this country has some millionaire widows who might be sufficiently interested to look him over. Now, that's about as far as any legitimate statement of the case can properly go. Perhaps that altogether desirable candidate might win one of those widows; perhaps he might not; for the millionaire widow is the very woman who, from her experience of life, reaches the conclusion that it may try all it pleases to put her on the matrimonial bargain counter, but she is going to dodge as long as she is able. The real reluctance of these women to wed again seems to be due to a general condition of spirit which makes them all the more desirable. They all appear to retain, with the acquisition of their millions, that peculiarly feminine attribute of financial common sense which prevents women from being spendthrifts. Unless their marriage has added them with a Boni de Castellane and they are so completely enamored as Anna Gould, they all display a notable faculty for keeping what they have, which is neither avarice nor parsimoniousness, but merely practical self-defense. The girl making her debut into papa's wealth is only too liable to be dazzled by impetuous nobility. But her mother, widowed and inheriting the family fortune, is prone to regard it as a sort of sacred trust. That is why only the man who is altogether desirable has anything like a chance to remove the mourning veil that covers her. Everybody thought that the beautiful and young Mrs. William B. Leeds, widow of the Waples magnate, at whose death she inherited the bulk of his estate, would take to matrimony again like a duck to water. Captain Paget, son of General Sir Arthur Paget, Lord Alexander Thynne, several other Englishmen and various distinguished members of Europe's nobility all thought so, too. She went to England, cut a swath in society and gave every indication of being, if not eager, at least willing to accept the suitor who could offer her social advantages commensurate with her millions. About every week or so the cables had a new candidate for the honor of marrying the tiptop widow. Until this fall, when she gently explained that she really thought the good old United States would be the best place in which to rear her boy to be a useful citizen and remove herself as far as possible from the bargain counter. The first Mrs. Leeds, who she supplanted in the tiptop magnate's fancy, has a million of her own—the price at which she consented to release the husband whose affection for her had been weakened by the sight of another pretty face. No unworthy rival of the many-millioned second Mrs. Leeds was the first whatever Mr. Leeds' taste in wives was. When the pair of them ran afoul of each other at Palm Beach, the original Mrs. Leeds in complacent grass widowhood and the second in the glory of her triumph, the first one turned loose gown after gown until her successful rival had to call on Mr. Leeds for carte blanche in ordering dresses enough to serve as first aid to her injured feelings. The dresses came, and Mrs. Leeds No. 1 was outplayed in the eyes of the amused throng of fashionables. But she left the impression ineradicable that her former husband had merely been caught by freshness of features, not by any superiority in real beauty.

was to marry Mrs. J. B. French, widow of a former partner of J. Pierpont Morgan. Some Large Prizes. Marshall Field's widow, whom he married when he was 70 years old, received about $3,000,000 out of his estate of more than $10,000,000. The direct bequest to her in his will was for $3,000,000; it supplemented a marital gift of $2,000,000. As Mrs. Caton she had been his next door neighbor for thirty years, and his loneliness in age finally brought them together. Not an overpoweringly wealthy woman as modern fortunes go, Mrs. Field became the owner of a fortune whose size was the same as that left to his widow by the late James Henry Smith, the "Silent Smith," who married the former Mrs. Rhineland Stewart, mother of Anita Stewart, now Duchess de Viseu. The same level-headedness has characterized Mrs. Smith, even though she gratified her ambition, and her daughter's, by letting Anita wed her Portuguese Prince de Braganza. She hastened to let herself out of all matrimonial engagements—and she kept herself out, with equal positiveness, of the princely ambitions of her son-in-law's family by refusing to finance him for the upset throne. She squelched all that talk by stating that it was just silly, and the hopes that were based on the portion of the Smith millions that came to her went a-glimmering. Among the wealthiest widows in the world, not excepting Mrs. Russell Sage, and even Mrs. Hetty Green, is Mrs. Mary W. Harriman, whose fortune, at first estimated at $25,000,000, is now believed to be between $125,000,000 and $150,000,000. Under the will of the great railway king she is absolute mistress of it all. But under his confidence in her she is as absolutely removed from chances of marriage as if he were still alive. Her price given to society that Mrs. Potter Palmer, the widow with $20,000 a year as her income, Mrs. Harriman is accepted as being quite indifferent to any possibility of changing the single estate that has come to her—Philadelphia North American.

Suitors Lost Out. The unflinching wonder of Paris, for her obstinacy to widowhood, is the beautiful Mrs. Jackson Gouraud, whose graces have been lauded by admirers for several years, while her income, $30,000 a year—the bulk of her father's $1,000,000 having been left to her mother, whose heiress she is—has filled scores of ambitious suitors with a covetousness equal to their genuine eagerness for her charming self. She may be regarded now, like the second Mrs. Leeds, as wedded to her celibacy; the defeat of her wooers has been too unvarying. Not more than half a dozen years have passed since Mrs. Ogden Golet, mother of the duchess of Roxburghe, was reported to be engaged to the Count de Contant-Hiron. Well, she wasn't. But she was a far richer widow—the fortune in her case being $50,000 and an additional income of $150,000 a year—whom popular opinion regarded as possibly willing, but bound to surrender to the very right man alone. Even the brilliant W. Bourke Cockran did not win the famous Mrs. Jack Gardner of Boston, when their engagement was reported, a little after the Golet-Hiron match. The United States government got nearly $500,000 from her when she paid the taxes on the works of art in her museum. The same ill fortune has attended the rumor that J. J. Van Alen
