

Desperate Desmond

Thrilling Race Between Aerial and Terrestrial Message Bearers, with Unexpected Result

By Hersheyfield

Desmond, the most cruel-hearted villain in all that land of envy, glances over the shoulder of the messenger and sees the man carrying the message. He is so surprised that he drops the message and it falls to the ground. Desmond picks it up and reads it. He is so angry that he orders his men to go and find the messenger. They find him and bring him back to Desmond. Desmond orders his men to take Desmond to the Turkish camp. Desmond is so angry that he orders his men to take Desmond to the Turkish camp. Desmond is so angry that he orders his men to take Desmond to the Turkish camp.

Ab, but! The carrier pigeon, speeding at fifty miles an hour with Desmond's message to the Turkish, shoots right into a box kite, used for advertising. Because it can be seen so far as the level desert. The kite, however, may have heard before, is not always to the southwest at the same time. When an ant starts to have their little vantage on the swift meteor-like pigeon ending its race here.

In the meantime the ants, which progress not as fast as the carrier pigeon, are attracted by the message they are dragging. Thus we see that Desmond's message has triumphed over speed, and the old saw about the race not being always to the swift has come true once more. When an ant starts going it keeps right on, even if it knows whether it is going or not.
