Mr. Robert Bruce Mantell has come to Omaha again, this time to execute a self-imposed task which even his mighty namesake might have looked upon with trembling and misgivings. For Mr. Mantell proposes to enact six different plays within the space of four days, having two afternoon performances; five of these plays are Shakesperean, the sixth the near-classic "Richelieu." In the course of his undertaking Mr. Mantell will range in assumption of character from the robust, athletic youngster, Orlando, to the senile and doddering Lear; from the unscrupulously bold and cruel warrior-king, Richard III, to the philosophical student, Hamlet; and from the honest and impetuous martinet, Othello, to the crafty statesman, Richelieu. If serious theatrical endeavor anywhere presents a wider range than this, it does not at this moment occur to mind. Mr. Mantell is at least immune from the accusation that he is a dress parade actor.

Mr. Mantell began his work last night at the Boyd theater by presenting "Richard III" in impressive fashion. He uses the Colly Cibber version, long ago made as familiar to patrons of the theater as Shakespeare's version is to the student. It is much more useful to Mr. Mantell than some of the other roles he undertakes, as it offers him scope for the qualities of acting with which he is most blessed. He keeps close to the conventional notion of Richard, but does it so well that it seems like a creation. If anything, he emphasizes the cruelty of the character at the expense of its subtlety; for it must be recalled that Richard was really the statesman and politician as well as the warrior of the Yorkist branch of the house of Plantagenet, and his craft was equal to his courage or his cruelty. But Mantell seems to revel in the sardonic humor of the role and throws it into high relief at all times. His scene with King Henry, his wooing of Anne, his cozening of his mother and sister-in-law, and his hypocrisy with the lord mayor and citizens are well done, and in his dream the night before Bosworth he is very effective. In a word, Mantell is good, but not great, as Richard III.

Mr. Crawley is really impressive as Henry VI and Mr. Lindsley makes Buckingham much what it ought to be; Mr. Lieber gives a popular notion of young Richmond, and Miss Wakeman, Miss Reynolds and Miss Scott are well cast for the roles they carry. In general, Mr. Mantell has excellent support and his stage direction is excellent. One might wish, however, that Richard's army looked less like Falstaff's, and to add the hope that some day a manager will arise with the courage to lop off the Bosworth Field episode, Richard could well be disposed of and Richmond's triumph assured without the expedient of a "combat" that is so patently no combat at all. Or, as an alternative, let us return to the robustious days of Forrest or Tom Keene, whose Richmonds had to fight or be driven ingloriously from the scene.

This afternoon "As You Like It," with Miss Wakeman in the role of Rosalind, Mr. Mantell as Orlando and Mr. Lieber as Jacques, is to be the bill, and it ought to be a real delight. Miss Wakeman should make a charming Rosalind. Tonight "Othello" will be presented, with Mr. Mantell as the Moor, Mr. Lieber as Iago and Miss Wakeman as Desdemona.

There is some ineffable charm about the scenes depicted in "School Days," which opened yesterday for a week's run at the Brandeis, that makes it mellow into a better and better show as it comes back season after season. Young, likeable Herman Timberg is still with "School Days," and still retains his violin, from which he draws some of the sweetest tones that one could wish to hear. Mr. Timberg is surrounded with a pretty, shapely and youthful bunch of girls, who dance agilely and pleasingly. Mr. Timberg himself is more certain in his impersonation of the young Russian Jew, who has just landed in this country.

Two large audiences were present for the opening performances yesterday. Though the matinee crowd was forced to await the arrival of a delayed train bearing the troup—and wait two hours—it was patient and seemed to enjoy the show more because of this long wait.

Present at the afternoon performance were many children, and they were enthusiastic for everything that the school characters on the stage did. Indeed, "School Days" is a show primarily for youngsters, and if there are any Omaha boys and girls whose parents desire to bribe them into being good for a while, here is a suggestion: Let them see Herman Timberg and his workers. There are full two and a half hours of refined enjoyment for youngsters and just the same amount for grownups.

Several new songs have been added to the musical numbers of the play. Among these is "That Ba-Boon Baby Dance," a late musical effort that is all the rage in the American Music Hall in Chicago just now. As rendered by Miss Alma Hill this number is one of the best ragtime dancing songs that has been heard in Omaha this season.

Miss Laura Laird, who played the part of Lotta Gold, is an Omaha girl. She is pretty and was very successful in her acting of the rich young girl.

"The Girl and the Judge" at the American.

Boyd Nolan, new leading man for Miss Eva Lang, star of the Woodward Stock company at the American theater, made his Omaha debut yesterday afternoon, the play, Clyde Fitch's "The Girl and the Judge." To say that Mr. Nolan was favorably received yesterday afternoon and evening would be putting it mildly. The receptions upon his first appearances were properly cordial, but not sufficiently so as to make their sincerity questionable. As the play progressed and Mr. Nolan proved his worthiness of the place given him the audience clearly showed their approval and their endorsement of Manager Woodward's selection. Mr. Nolan is a young man, but from his manner on the stage one may feel safe in saying he is a man of long and large experience. While American theater patrons who regretted Austin Webb's leaving the Omaha Woodward company must continue to regret—Mr. Webb having won a permanent place in their appreciation—they also must be gratified that his place is taken by an actor of real merit.

"The Girl and the Judge" is the story of a judge of the probate court in a western city, who falls in love with a girl who has a drunkard for a father and a kleptomaniac for a mother. Mrs. Stanton steals a valuable piece of jewelry from the judge's mother and pawns it. Mr. and Mrs. Stanton, who have separated, realize that a scandal would ruin the life of their daughter and they nobly eliminate themselves. The judge and his mother are big enough to understand and sympathize with Mr. and Mrs. Stanton, and the judge marries the girl after he has saved her parents from the threatened disgrace.

The play is one whose supporting roles demand good acting and the members of the company are equal to the dem
