Desperate Desmond

Through the streets of Tripoli, Desmond, the international crook, is carrying the beautiful Rosamond on his bicy-cie. The heroic Claude and his American sallors must follow on foot and they do not seem to have a chance in such an unequal race. However, a mirror, part of a Tripoll mover's household goods, blocks the path, and the villain believes it had luck to smash a mirror.

Undaunted by the journey on foot, Claude and the sailors from the American battleahip rush along the streets of the African city. Wherever you find an American sallor you can rely on finding a man who will not go out of his way to seek trouble and will never go out of his way to avoid it. Well may Desmond fle6.

The female of the species is valuer (perhaps) than the male. So the Arab Indies, noticing a fine mirror being moved across the street, ask the moving men if they won't turn it up so that the dusky beauties may admire their reflections in the glass. And, of course, there is a lot of primping to be done now, as mirrors are rare in Tripoli. Noses must be powdered and hair curled-and bing' goes the curling tongs, right through the mirror. It is bad luck all right to smash a mirror, especially if you have to pay for it. But then the movers will undoubtedly have some good excuse to offer for the

The sailors, led by Claude, Rosamond's heroic lover, have dashed up and captured the villain, whose bloycle tires were punctured by the broken glass of the mirror. The American sailors will deal harshiy with the renegade white man. To-morrow's paper will show all pictures.
