ECNDON, Jan. 16.—The near approach of the Olympic games is stirring British athletic circles, and discussions cencerning the best methods for regaining the laurels lost at the 190 Olympic are rife among sportamen.

All are agreed on the one point that British apperance must be re-established on track and field, but the best methods for accompilahing this has given rise to numerous controversies. The problem of ecaching and training is causing the most litter altercation, but the advocates of the American system of propering athletes are growing in strength, and in spite of the prejudice against him, the paid coach will probably soon become a feature in the amateur sporting world here. Amateurism in England continues to be distinctly aristocratic, and while a gentleman may play with or against a professional, contrary to the American practice, the distinction between the two is insver lost slight of. The rule that no manual worker can be an amateur is accepted without question, and that England would like to see this regulation imposed on American entries to the Olympic games is indicated by a renewal of the criticism of athletes from the United States who work their way across the Atlantic on cattle boats.
