the great statue of Buddha aude Eclaire and his beautiful Rosa-ind, aided by the American boys, are defying Desperate Desmond and his cruei friends, the Manchu supporters of the emperor. Bullets are flying fast, but the status so far has protected the gul-lant little party inside it from injury. It is only a question of time until Des-mond and his allies have to surrender.

Then we see the office of a Chinese inspector of weights and measures. The inspector inspects weights and measures as closely as some inspectors do in western lands. Should a wealthy merchant approach him in the proper spirit, the inspection would be conducted in an equally proper spirit, and the merchant would continue to do business as he liked. Such

As the statue of Buddha happened to be resting upon the street scales outside the inspector's office, that worthy of-ficial resolves to press the button and lower it into his cellar. The statue may be worth something, and anyway the for eign devils inside should be impriso So the heroic Claude, his Rosamond the second class heroes with them are being rapidly lowered into darkness.

moud and his demoniacal allies rush up and demand the surrender of the party inside. If Claude were alone he would die sooner than surrender, especially as he knows the Chinese have strange ways of dealing with their prisoners. But for the sake of Rosamond he knows that all further resistance must be abandoned and Desmond allowed to triumph.

in the power of Desmond, and the villain rejoices in the discomfiture of Claude. That peerless here has been grasped by the Manchu soldiers, those fiends in Chinese form, and nebody knows what torture is in store for him at their ruthless hands. In any case it will be nothing pleasant, as Desmond well knows, and he sees Claude and Rosamond shall know.

Here we see the terrible revenge of the soldiers. They have put Claude in the kang. His head is stuck through a big board, so that he cannot sleep. The board is so wide that he cannot put his hands himself. It is a fine Chinese custom, the cangue. The wretched Rosamond is forced to watch her lover, whose fate will be
