Claude Eclaire Plays Possum to Some Purpose,

Claude Eclaire, the peerless hero, lies upon a stretcher, unconscious. The crusi Desmond forces Resamond to aid him in earing her lover to some place where the hero's career may be quietly ended forever. It is a horrible situation for the poor girl, but the tiger would abandon its prey before Desmond his.

What a wonderful thing is fresh air! If there is a cure-all in the world, fresh air is that cure-all. It makes pale cheeks rosy and rosy cheeks ruddy. We get too little of it in this age of steam heat, sub-ways and rathskellers. Just see how fresh air revives Claude, until he pulls out a knife to silt the canvas of the stretcher.

Desmond goes along contentedly enough, thinking that Claude is still un and that he will have a snap in putting him away for keeps. But you see Claude has slit a hole in the canvas and is even now reaching out in the hope of finding some weapon with which he may put Desmond qut of the villain business.

You know what it feels like to get a good, stiff crack on the shins. Mortal injury is not likely to result, but, ch, what 's pain! No wonder Desmond jumps when Claude picks up a club and gets him squarely on the shin. Not even the villain's from nerve can stand that, and he forgets for the moment all about his nefarious plot.

The "unconscious" here has suddenly The "unconscious" here has subdenly come to life, and the villain learns to his surprise that Claude, so far from being helpless, is as husky as ever. As for Rosamond, she is delighted to see her lover all right again and the villain powerless in his strong grasp. She knows that Desmond will now be fittingly pun-

"I'm the bey!" cries Desperate Desmond, "but I don't like the looks of this place." The villain is being forced through the gates of the Forbidden City, from the walls of which no white man has ever returned. It is a horrible fate, but then the scoundrel richly deserves it. But see what happens on the next page.
