

Desmond, the notorious international crook, is at last going to his doom. He is being thrust through the gates of the b'orbidden City, from which no white man has ever returned alive. The fate of those rash enough to enter the gates has never been known, but it is safe to say it was a terrible one.

The cries of Desmond, as the Chinese inside the forbidden gates get hold of him, are too much for sentitive Rosamond and she hurries away. Claude, however, has' seen Desmond escape too often and he resolves to wait until the end, so as to be sure that the villain has indeed been executed.

Attracted by the cries of Desmond and the enraged Chinese inside the walls, Claude attempts to peep through the keyhole. This is a lowdown trick on anybody's part, and even in our hero it is a habit we cannot commend. Eavesdropping and spying are not by any means herolo

Punishment comes quickly upon our hero for his condescension is spying. The willy orientals have anticipated some such act, and the door of the Forbidden City has been fitted with trick panels which will trap any one who touches them. So Claude's hands are now caught in this ingenious trap.

With loud cries the Chinese inside suddenly open the door and our peering hero is dragged inside very quickly. It is a sad fate for a hero, who has hitherto been peerless. So when heroes stoop to spying they are no better off than ordinary nonpeeking mortals would be.

Now the wretched Rosamond outside the gates of the Forbidden City can hear the volces of her lover, Claude, and the scoundrel, Desmond, as they argue before the Chinks. It is a trying situation for the girl, for who knows what will befall Claude in the mysterious city. See tomorrow's pictures.
