AINSWORTH WILL RETIRE AT ONCE

General Ainsworth maintains the attitude of absolute reticence he has steadfastly occupied since Secretary Stimson's letter was made public. It is understood that he is now arranging for counsel and preparing his own defense.

It is fully expected at the War department that this case will figure extensively before congress and that, perhaps, the democratic house may take steps to investigate the whole War department and especially the relations between the general staff and the adjutant general's office.

The key to success in business is the persistent and judicious use of newspaper advertising.

MOVING HIS ART COLLECTION

Morgan's Famous Treasures Prepared for Removal to United States.

J. P. Morgan is withdrawing a large part of his collections from the Victoria and Albert museum in London simply because he wants them in this country, not because of any dissatisfaction with the museum management. This was made plain in a statement given out today by J. P. Morgan, Jr.

"The report that Mr. Morgan is bringing over a large part of his collections to this side is quite true," says the statement; "but the statement in the London Times that it was being done because of dissatisfaction with the manner in which the collections have been treated, or with any resentment against the authorities in England, is entirely incorrect. Mr. Morgan was perfectly satisfied with the care and attention which the English museum had given his collections, but very naturally has for a long time desired to have his collections in America."

The ultimate concentration of the scattered art treasures which J. P. Morgan has been collecting for many years at an estimated outlay of nearly $100,000,000 is said to be the real plan behind arrangements the American financier is now making for the transfer of an invaluable collection of ivories and gems from the museums in London to New York. J. P. Morgan, Jr., intimated that his father proposed to arrange also for the transfer of his art loans now in Paris and other European cities to America. Mr. Morgan has been collecting for so many years and buying so widely that it is said he himself hardly knows the extent of his holdings and has become determined to concentrate and catalogue them.

J. P. Morgan, Jr., said the Treasury department was co-operating with his father in the most cordial and effective manner possible and it was hoped there would be little difficulty in getting the art treasures to this country. They will be directed to the Metropolitan Museum of Art and will be stored there until the problem of finding room for the display can be properly solved.

The articles comprising the Morgan collections in the South Kensington museum consist of jewels, carved ivories, porcelains and bronzes, the whole being worth from $200,000 to $3,000,000, according to the estimates of English experts. The jewels, alone, are said to be valued at $1,500,000.—New York Post.
