Desperate Desmond

Though Feeling Not the Least Bit Ill, Claude is Doctored Against His Will.

By Hershfield

I—THE RECOGNITION.

Rosamond's anguished heart gives a great leap as she sees among the convicts her own Claude Eclaire. She knows that the machinations of the unscrupulous Desmond, and only that she happened to visit the prison as one of the quartet he would undoubtedly have had to spend his life behind the bars.

II—OBSERVED.

With her heart now filled with hope, Rosamond hurries through the streets to the governor's house. Knowing the justice of her case, she does not doubt that the official will quickly grant an order of release for her heroic lover. But the crafty Desmond has seen from the window the direction taken by Rosamond, and guesses what her purpose is.

III—A CRUEL PLAN.

Desmond, having guessed Rosamond's object, loses no time in preparing to foil the brave girl. He hastens to the jail, where he is in league with the corrupt officials, and hurriedly gets the prison barber to shave Claude's head, so as to disguise him as much as possible. With the razor so close to his neck the hero does not dare to protest vigorously.

IV—PUTTING ON THE BANDAGES.

To disguise Claude still further Desmond induces the prison hospital attendants to bandage up the prisoner, so that he cannot move hand or foot and cannot speak. Thus swathed, Claude could not be recognized by the keenest eye, and Desmond hopes that he cannot be identified when the pardon is brought for him.

V—"HERE'S THE PARDON!"

Urging the coolies pulling her rickshaw to run at their top speed, Rosamond dashes up to the prison gates with the governor's order for the release of her unjust imprisoned hero. She hopes that she will not be too late, and that Claude has not been spirited away to some other prison, where he would be out of her reach forever.

VI—WHO IS HE?

Desmond's plan has proven successful so far, for when Rosamond demands that Convict 99 be relieved of the bandages round his face the prison authorities refuse her request, as being against the rules. And with all the bandages on even her keen eyes are unable to identify her lover. Tomorrow's pictures show her next plan.
